Order Flow Blueprint: Momentum & Reversal Course

Module 2 – How Trends Begin & Develop.

Disclaimer

This course is for educational and informational purposes only and should not be considered a solicitation to buy or sell a futures contract or make any other type of investment decision. Futures trading contains substantial risk and is not for every investor. An investor could potentially lose all or more than the initial investment. Risk capital is money that can be lost without jeopardizing ones financial security or life style. Only risk capital should be used for trading and only those with sufficient risk capital should consider trading. Past performance is not necessarily indicative of future results.

CFTC Rules 4.41 - Hypothetical or Simulated performance results have certain limitations, unlike an actual performance record, simulated results do not represent actual trading. Also, since the trades have not been executed, the results may have under-or-over compensated for the impact, if any, of certain market factors, such as lack of liquidity. Simulated trading programs in general are also subject to the fact that they are designed with the benefit of hindsight. No representation is being made that any account will or is likely to achieve profit or losses similar to those shown.

One of the most useful applications of order flow is in trend analysis.

When you know what to look for in the order flow you can determine when a trend is ending, beginning, showing strength or weakness, or simply not trending.

Order flow allows you to see in real-time as a trend is developing or peaking.

What is important information to an order flow trader is noise to the longer term trader.

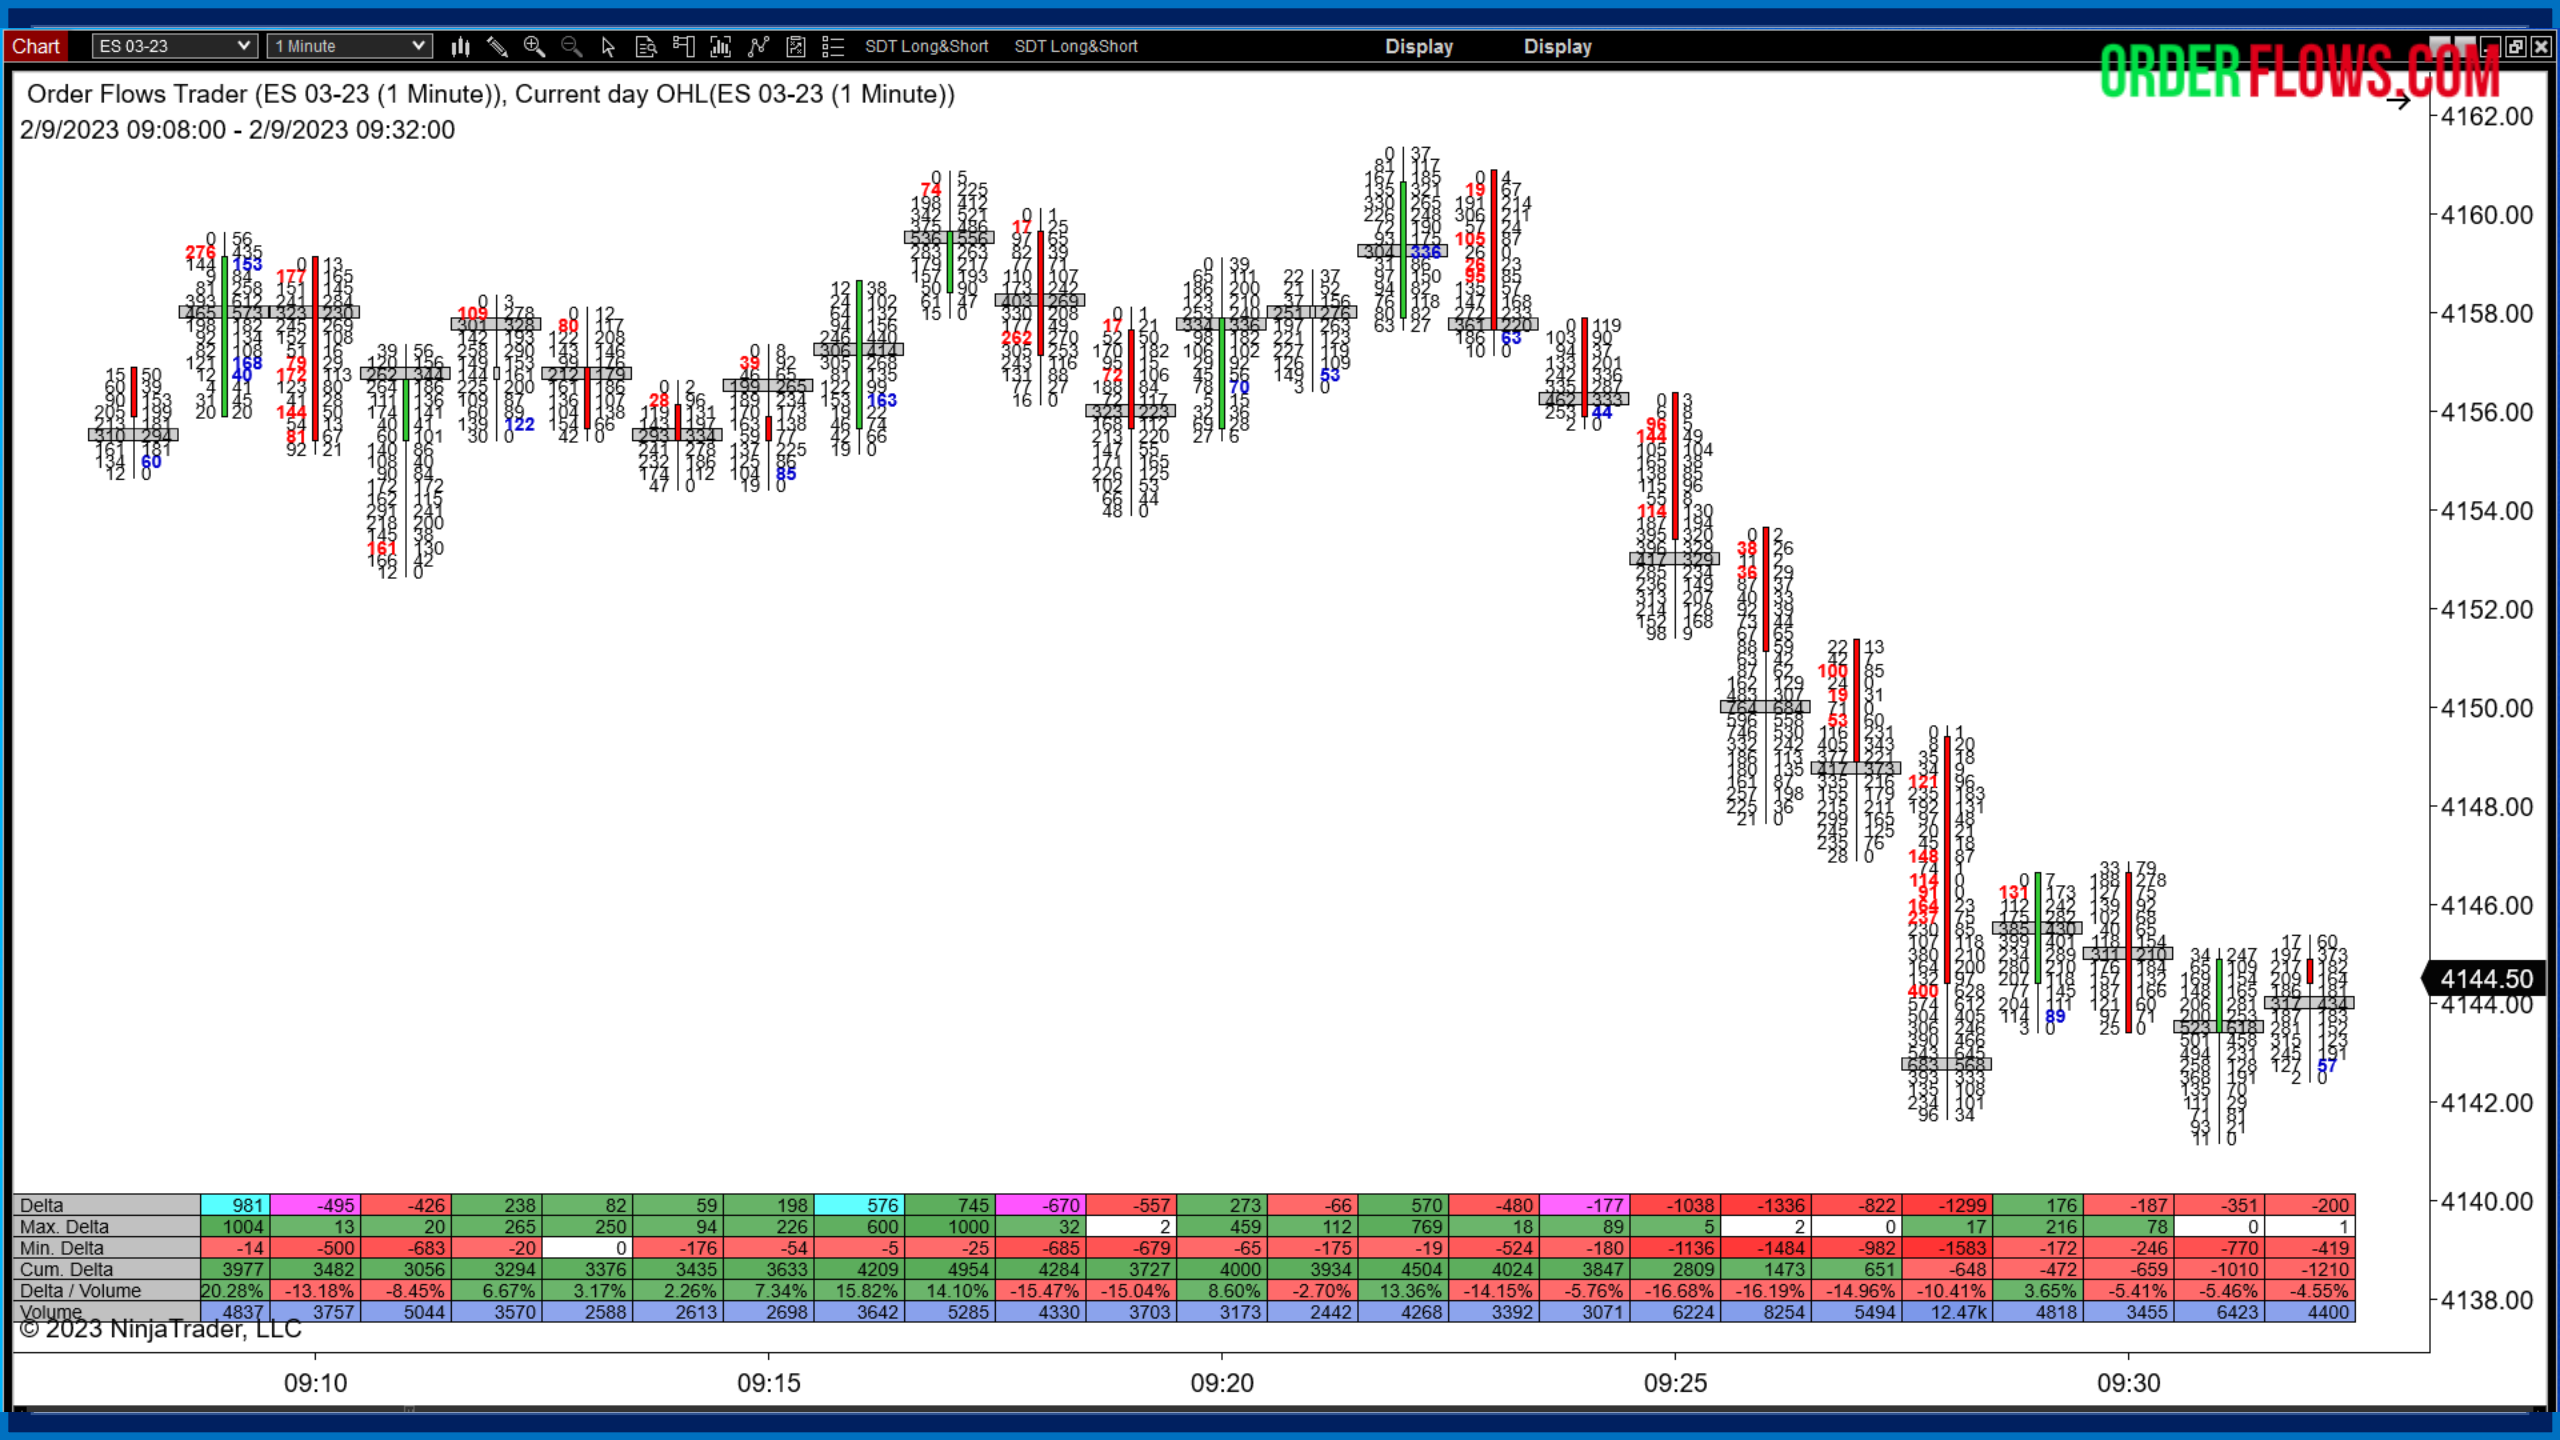

When analyzing order flow for trend development, you are often looking at the market when things have quieted down and are now starting to pick up.

Short-term price movements are not trading in a vacuum, they are caused by bigger macro activity in the market.

Even though you are looking at the market on a short time frame chart, it doesn’t mean you are following short-term traders. You watch a short-term chart to get a more granular look at what all-time frame traders are doing.

One of the way trends start is when a market is searching for liquidity that is a sign of things to come. That is valuable information.

What are signs the market is searching for liquidity?

Taking advantage of a trend ending means you have to think outside the box of retail herd mentality.

For example:
"where should I buy when everyone seems to be selling?"
Study. Think. Try. Find edge.

The way PM's trade is different than retail traders, forget about the size for a moment. When a PM is thinking about a trade, it can take him a while to make the decision to get into a trade. That is their ideal time to enter. Once they make their decision they want to get into the trade as quickly and effectively as possible. This is when they are their most aggressive. When they start adding to a position, they are not as anxious to get into the trade. Aggressive buying following by passive bidding.

Big traders with big orders tend to avoid price discovery because when they go to execute their orders they can impact prices. Think of it like trying to thread a needle, you need a very thin string, if you try to thread a shoelace through a needle it won't go. That is why big traders cut up their orders into small, tiny lots. This is done so traders following a tape don’t see 100 lot clips go through, they see 5 lots, 7 lots, 3 lots. However, the aggregate shows up in the footprint.
If a big trader can start moving size in an area of structure that is the ideal location for him.

Something that often gets lost on order flow traders is that institutional order flow isn't always just one-sided. It is two-sided most of the time.

But what you want to take advantage of is recognizing when it becomes one-sided either because one side pauses or one side completely dominates. This is where trends start.

Big players trade their big orders in the market very carefully. This is especially true in smaller markets. With the exception of Treasuries, most markets in their current form aren't designed for the now enlarged institutional sized trading that is now taking place. Markets are more designed for medium to large institutional investors and of course retail and hedging traders.

When there is strong market structure in place and the market is trading around that structure, then big size can come to the market and participate without fear of tipping their hand by moving size.

When a market is exhibiting weak structure, big orders will destabilize price action. When prices are affected by big orders in weak structure, it doesn't just affect the trader with the big order who is trying to execute, it affects the whole market.

After a breakout of structure (support/resistance) watch for evidence of weakness after the breakout.

If weakness is shown in the direction of the breakout, expect the breakout will fail.

If weakness is shown in the pullback to test the range boundaries (previous resistance becoming support), expect that price will continue in the direction of the breakout.

When there is no evidence of strength shown on approaching the structural support/resistance, we expect the test of the framework holds, in other words the existing trend will end and a reversal will start (for example a weak delta or sequential decline). A new trend, in the opposite direction.

When price is showing strength approaching the structural framework boundary (support like low of day), watch for a potential breakout which is a continuation of trend.

But also watch how the market is acting as we get close to the breakout and after the breakout.

Are there imbalances going into the breakout? If the market breaks out and pulls back watch for weakness in the pullback, if there is weakness in the pullback expect price to continue in direction of the breakout. These are signs of a trend continuing or ending and if the trend end a reversal may take place.

Trends end as volatility tends to revert to the mean. Think of it this way if your wife is mean to you most of the time, then is nice for a few days, chances are she will revert back to mean again. Basically what this means is that volatility will revert back to a more average or normal level after reaching an extreme high or extreme low.

Be a detective and look for clues that the trend is ending.

This concludes Module 2.

I will see you in the next module.
