Order Flow Blueprint: Momentum & Reversal Course

Module 3 – Signs of Order Flow Momentum.

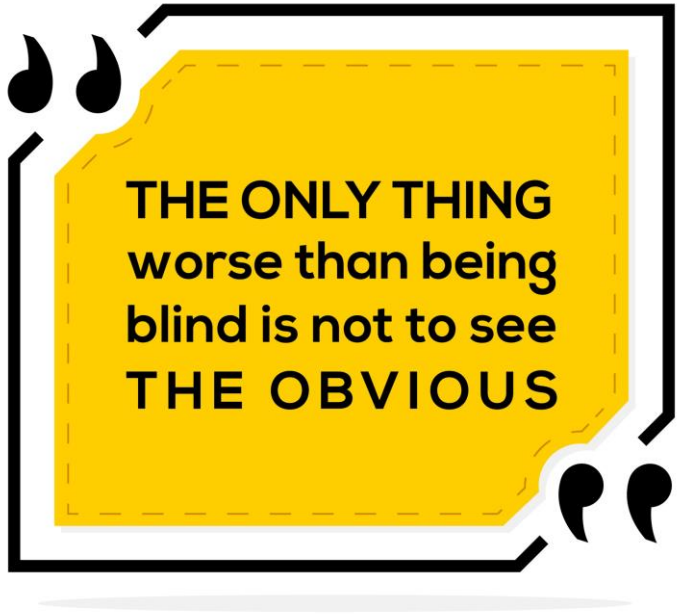

Disclaimer

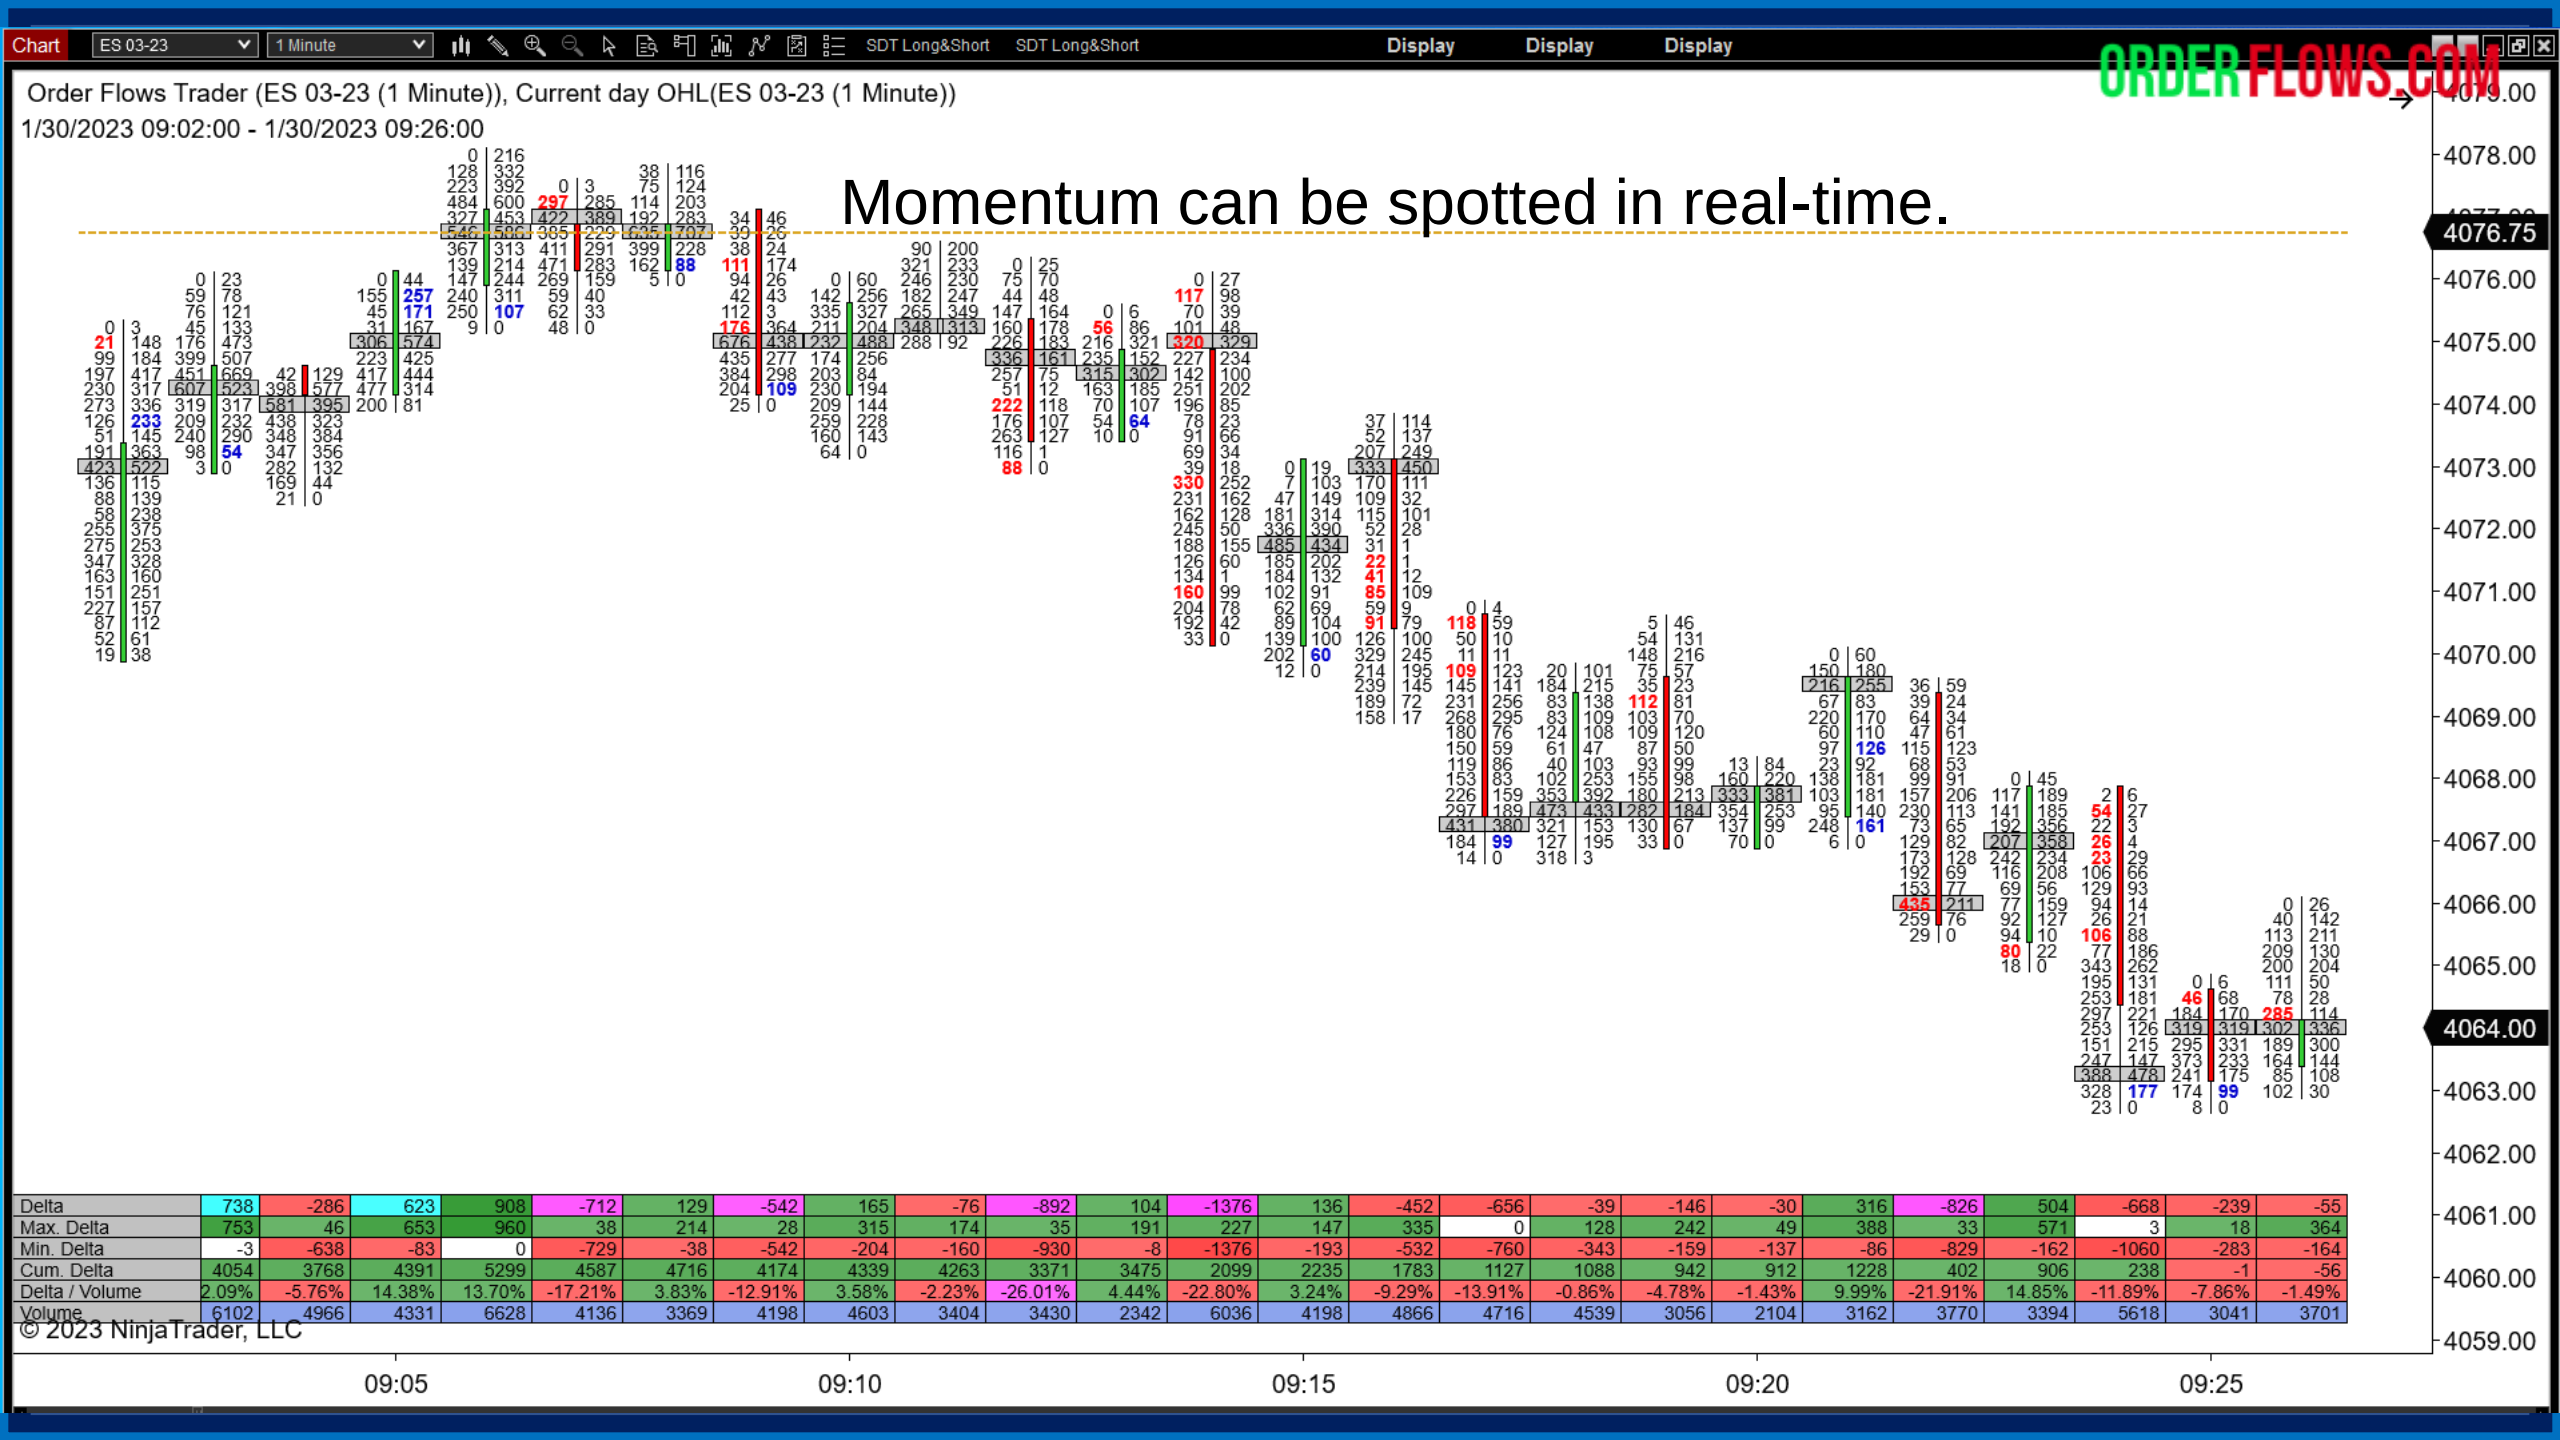

This course is for educational and informational purposes only and should not be considered a solicitation to buy or sell a futures contract or make any other type of investment decision. Futures trading contains substantial risk and is not for every investor. An investor could potentially lose all or more than the initial investment. Risk capital is money that can be lost without jeopardizing ones financial security or life style. Only risk capital should be used for trading and only those with sufficient risk capital should consider trading. Past performance is not necessarily indicative of future results.

CFTC Rules 4.41 - Hypothetical or Simulated performance results have certain limitations, unlike an actual performance record, simulated results do not represent actual trading. Also, since the trades have not been executed, the results may have under-or-over compensated for the impact, if any, of certain market factors, such as lack of liquidity. Simulated trading programs in general are also subject to the fact that they are designed with the benefit of hindsight. No representation is being made that any account will or is likely to achieve profit or losses similar to those shown.

You are not going to see something in the market unless you are looking for it.

The goal is to train your eye to spot momentum order flow when it appears and more importantly to trade it when it appears.

Traders like to use oscillators or indicators to spot trends.

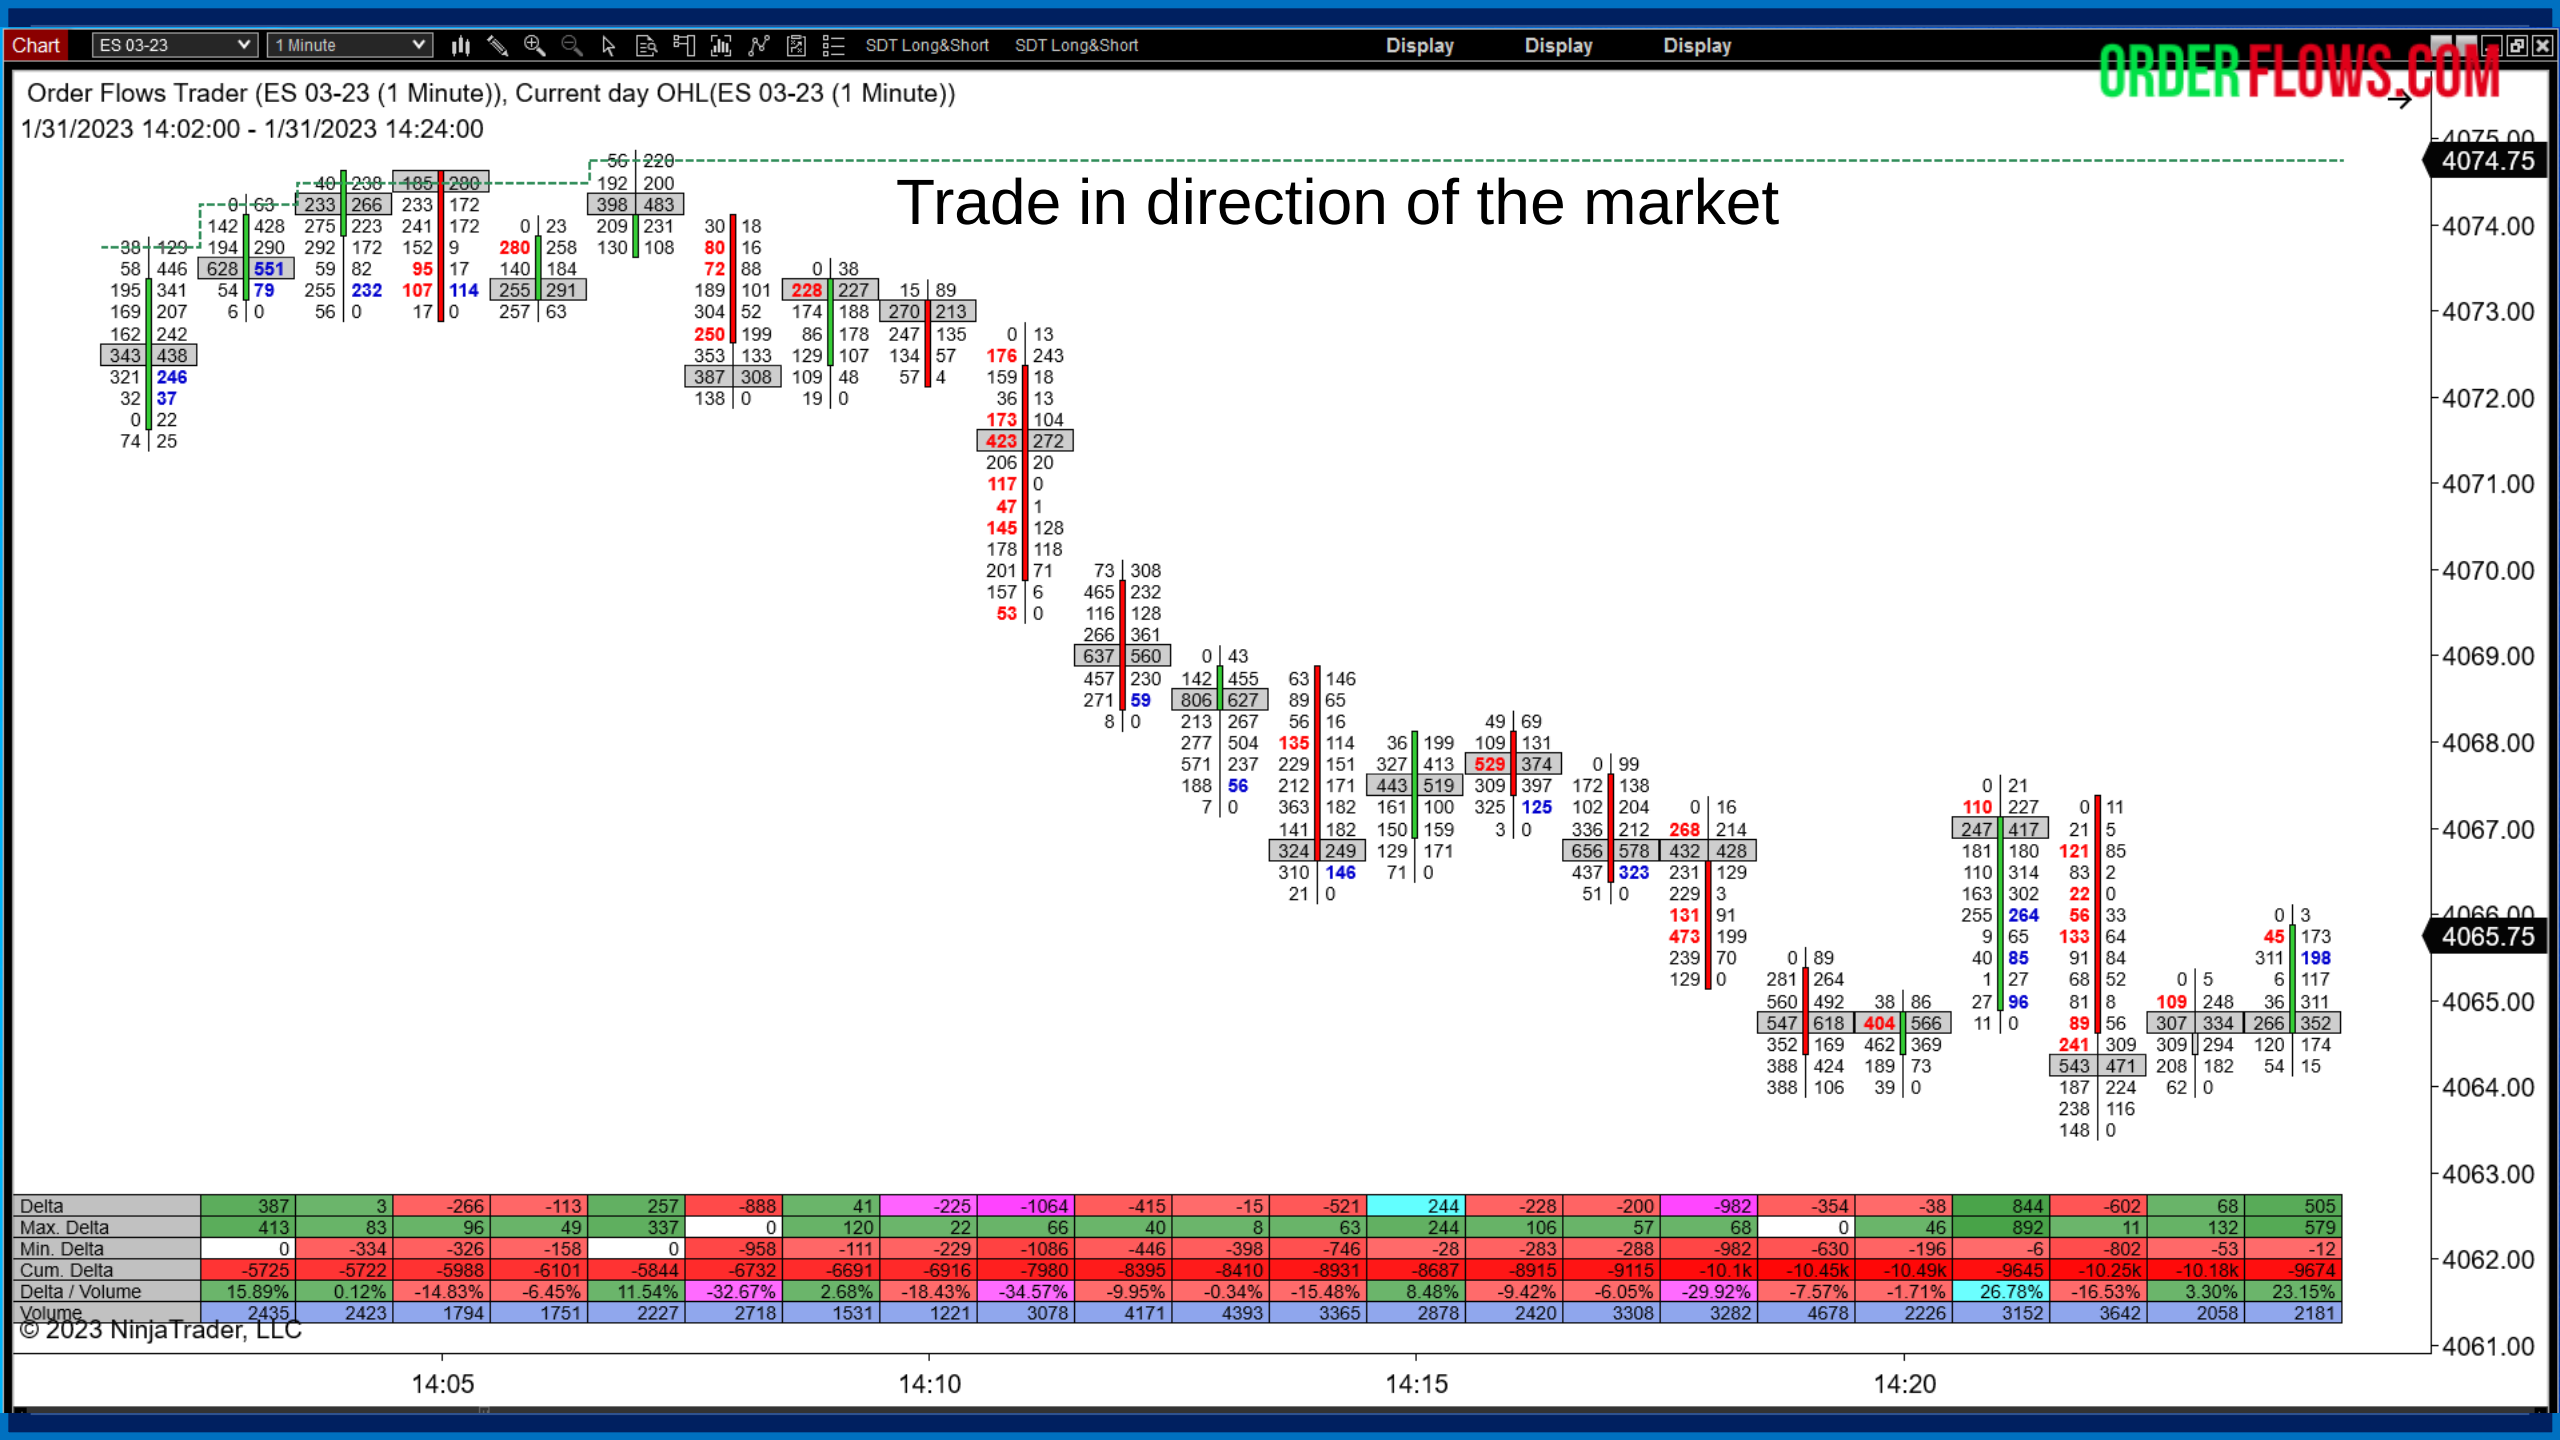

The problem with oscillators is they provide a ton of flase signals when the market is range bound.

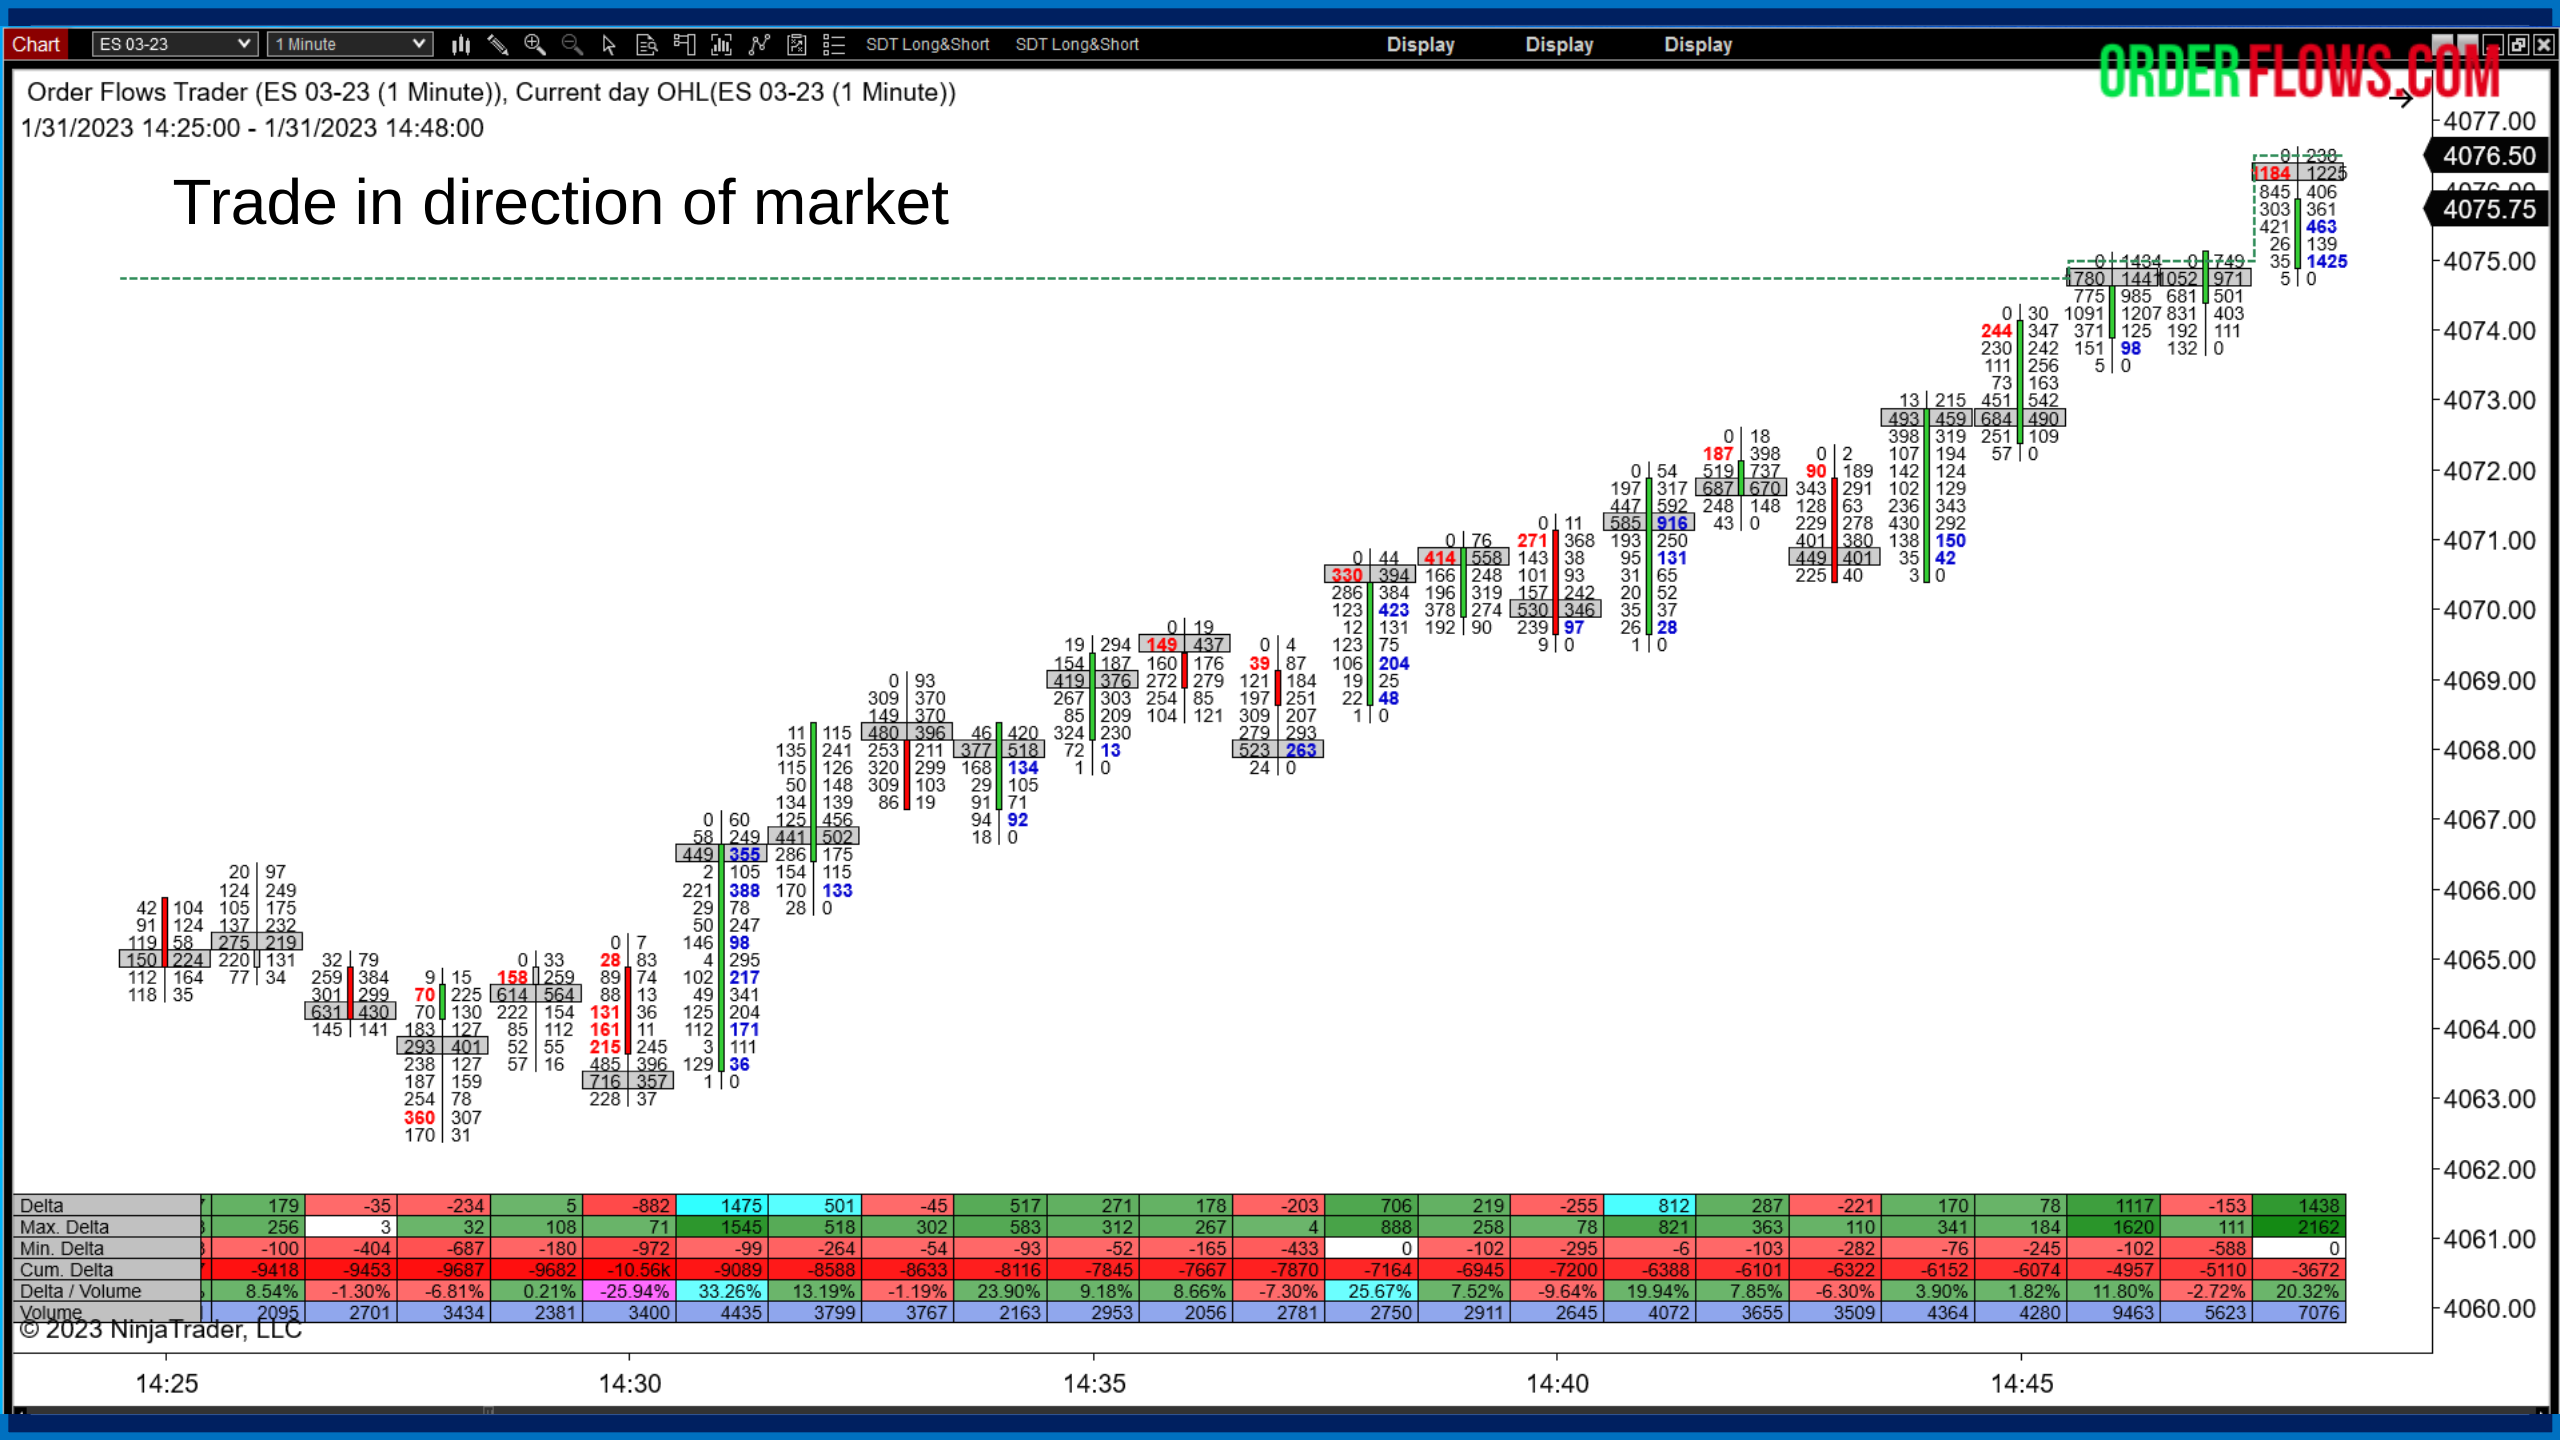

Price movement is limited, but the oscillator (MA) could be moving above and below the 0 line. This is frustrating because it gives the false appearing of strength or weakness in the market. It makes it look like there is something else there. Yet there is no there, there.

It is much less stressful to trade in the direction that the market is going. Essentially to trade in the direction of the trend. Obviously. And one of the easiest ways to do that is to look for signs of momentum in the order flow.

Market volatility is ever increasing because of two reasons: 1. Price is higher (larger swings result) and 2. We live in an information age where we are overwhelmed with information.

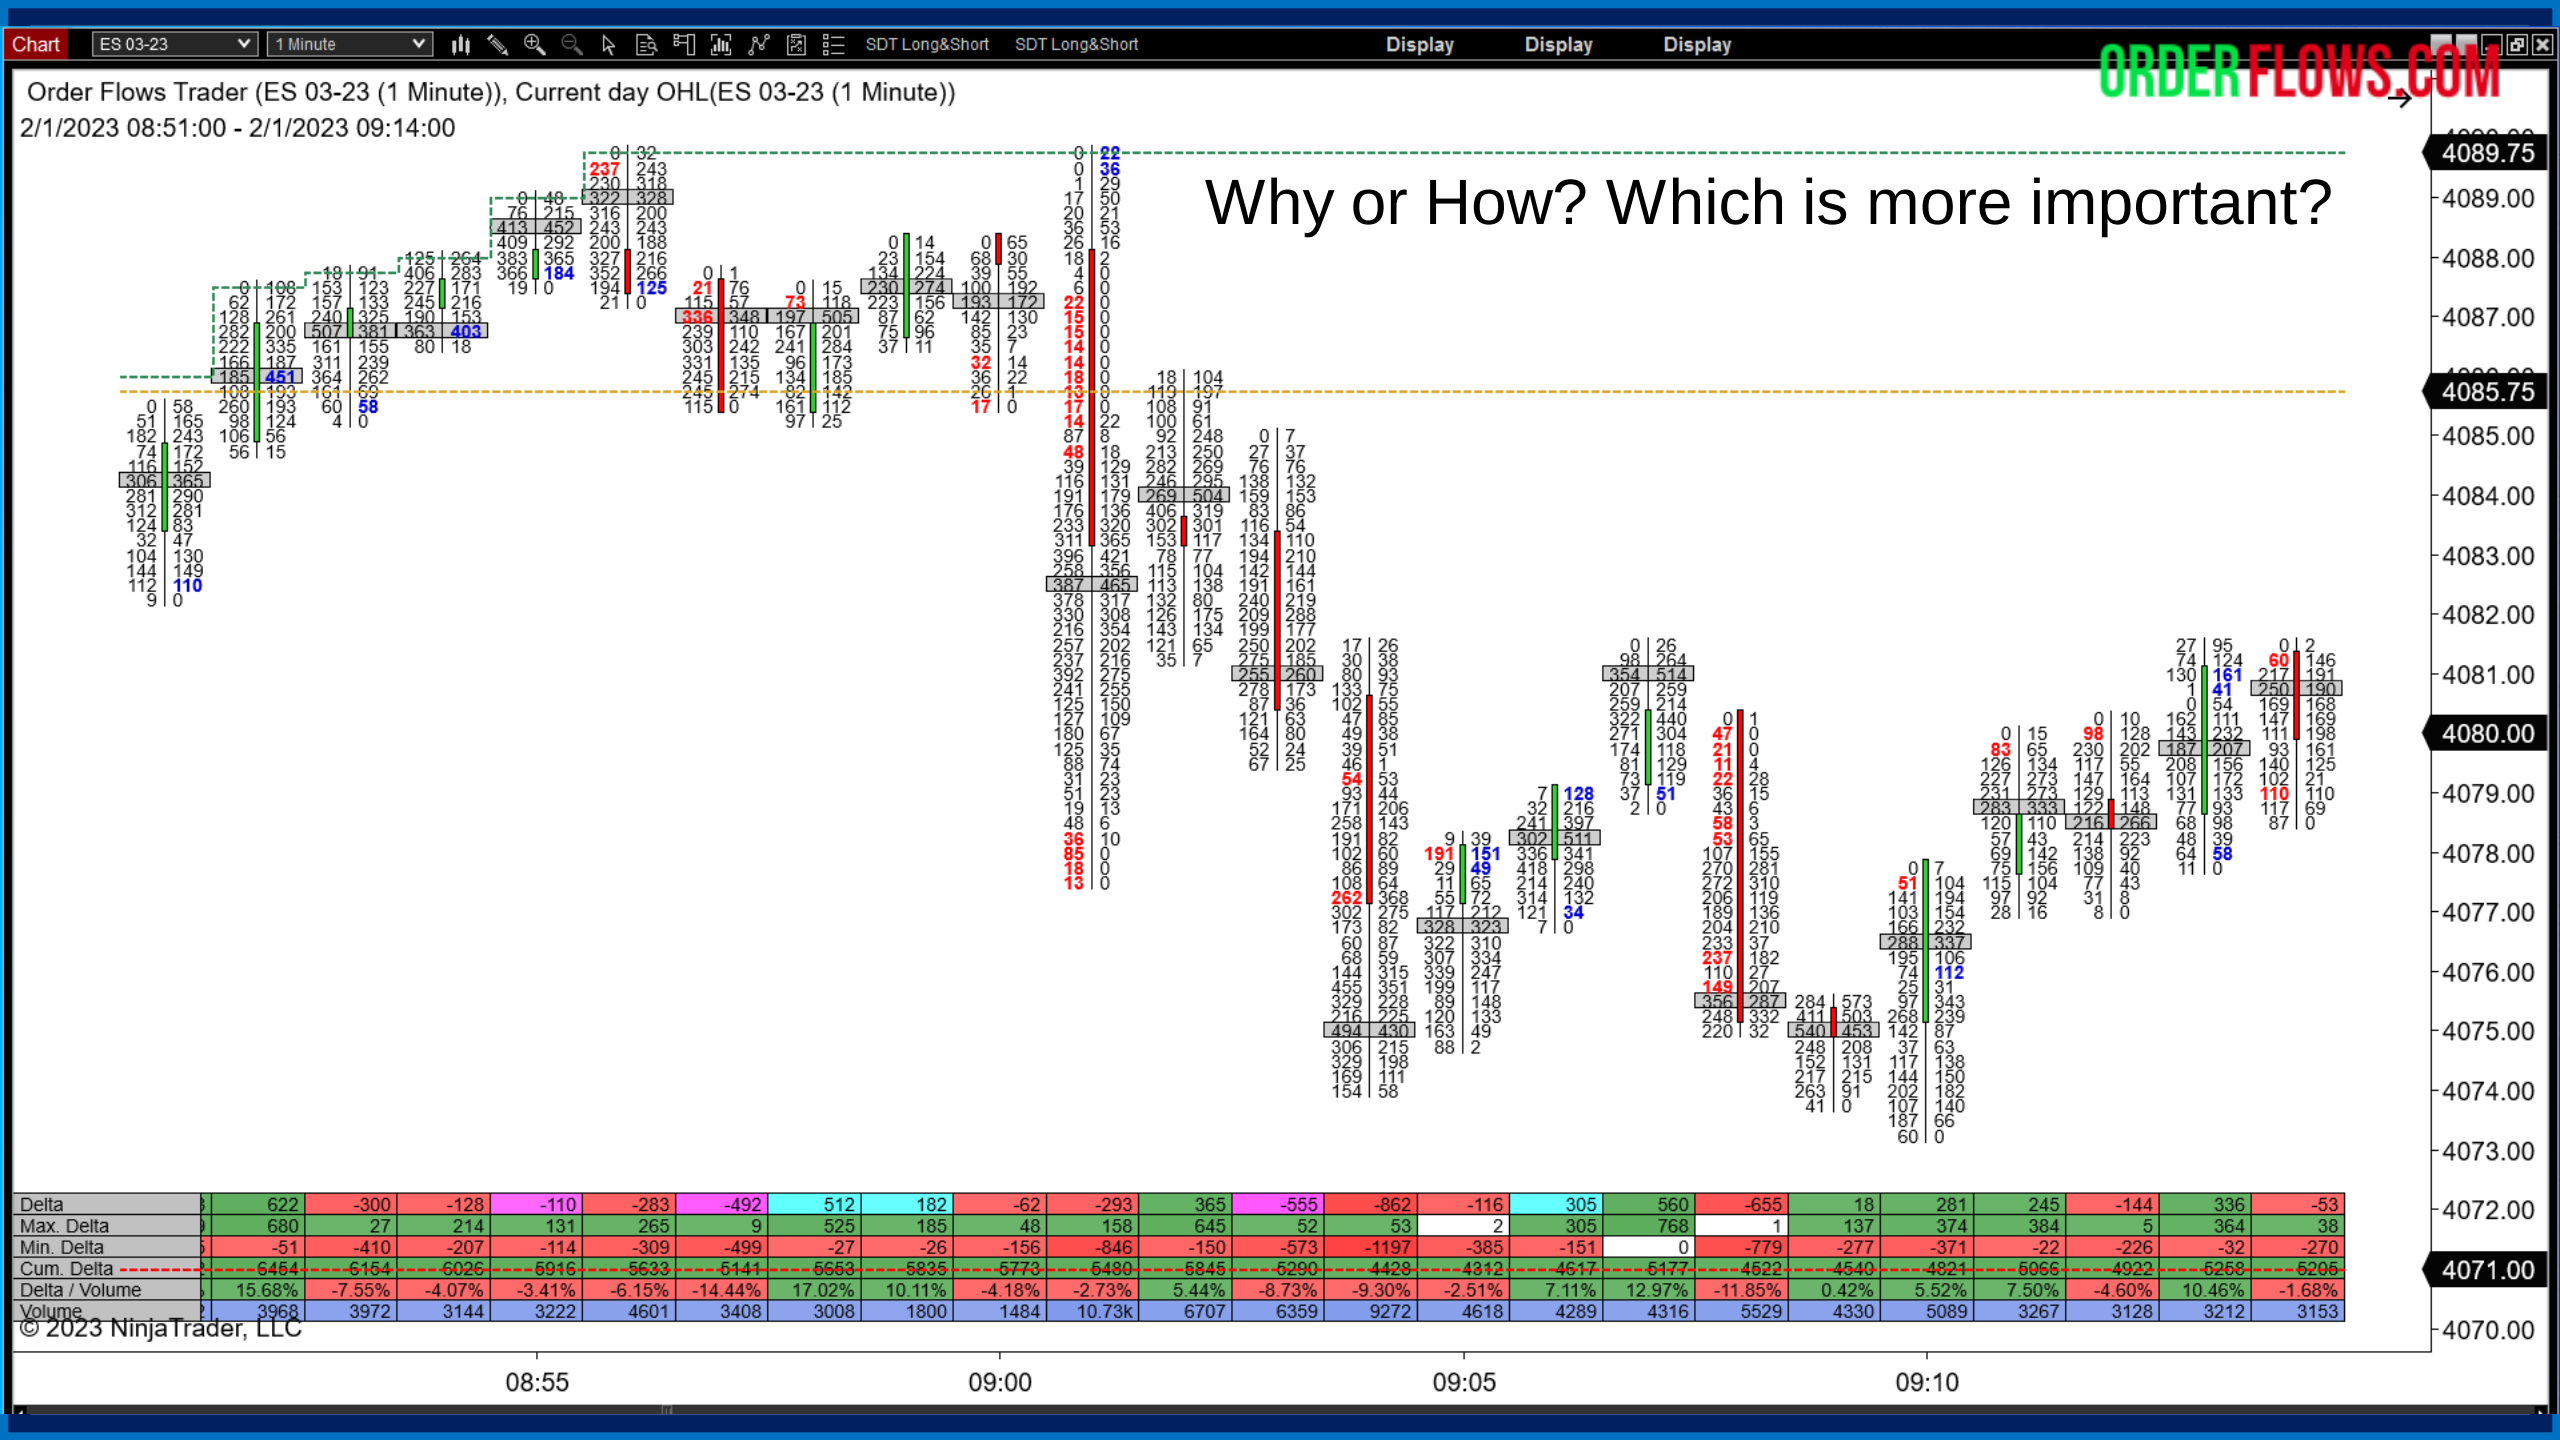

These are ways momentum is created.

We live in an age where people really only look for things they agree with. For example, are you on twitter? In your feed you only see things you support or agree with. People don't actively think for themselves, they are dependent on what other people tell them. In the markets we see that sometimes when bad information comes out and the market rallies. But when the bad news is just too much we see big nasty drops. The way we live now is we tend to ignore bad news until it is really too late.

Many traders look only for the "why" something happened and not the "how" something happened. Why did the market drop 20 points? That is the wrong question. How did the market drop 20 points? What were the signs in the order flow?

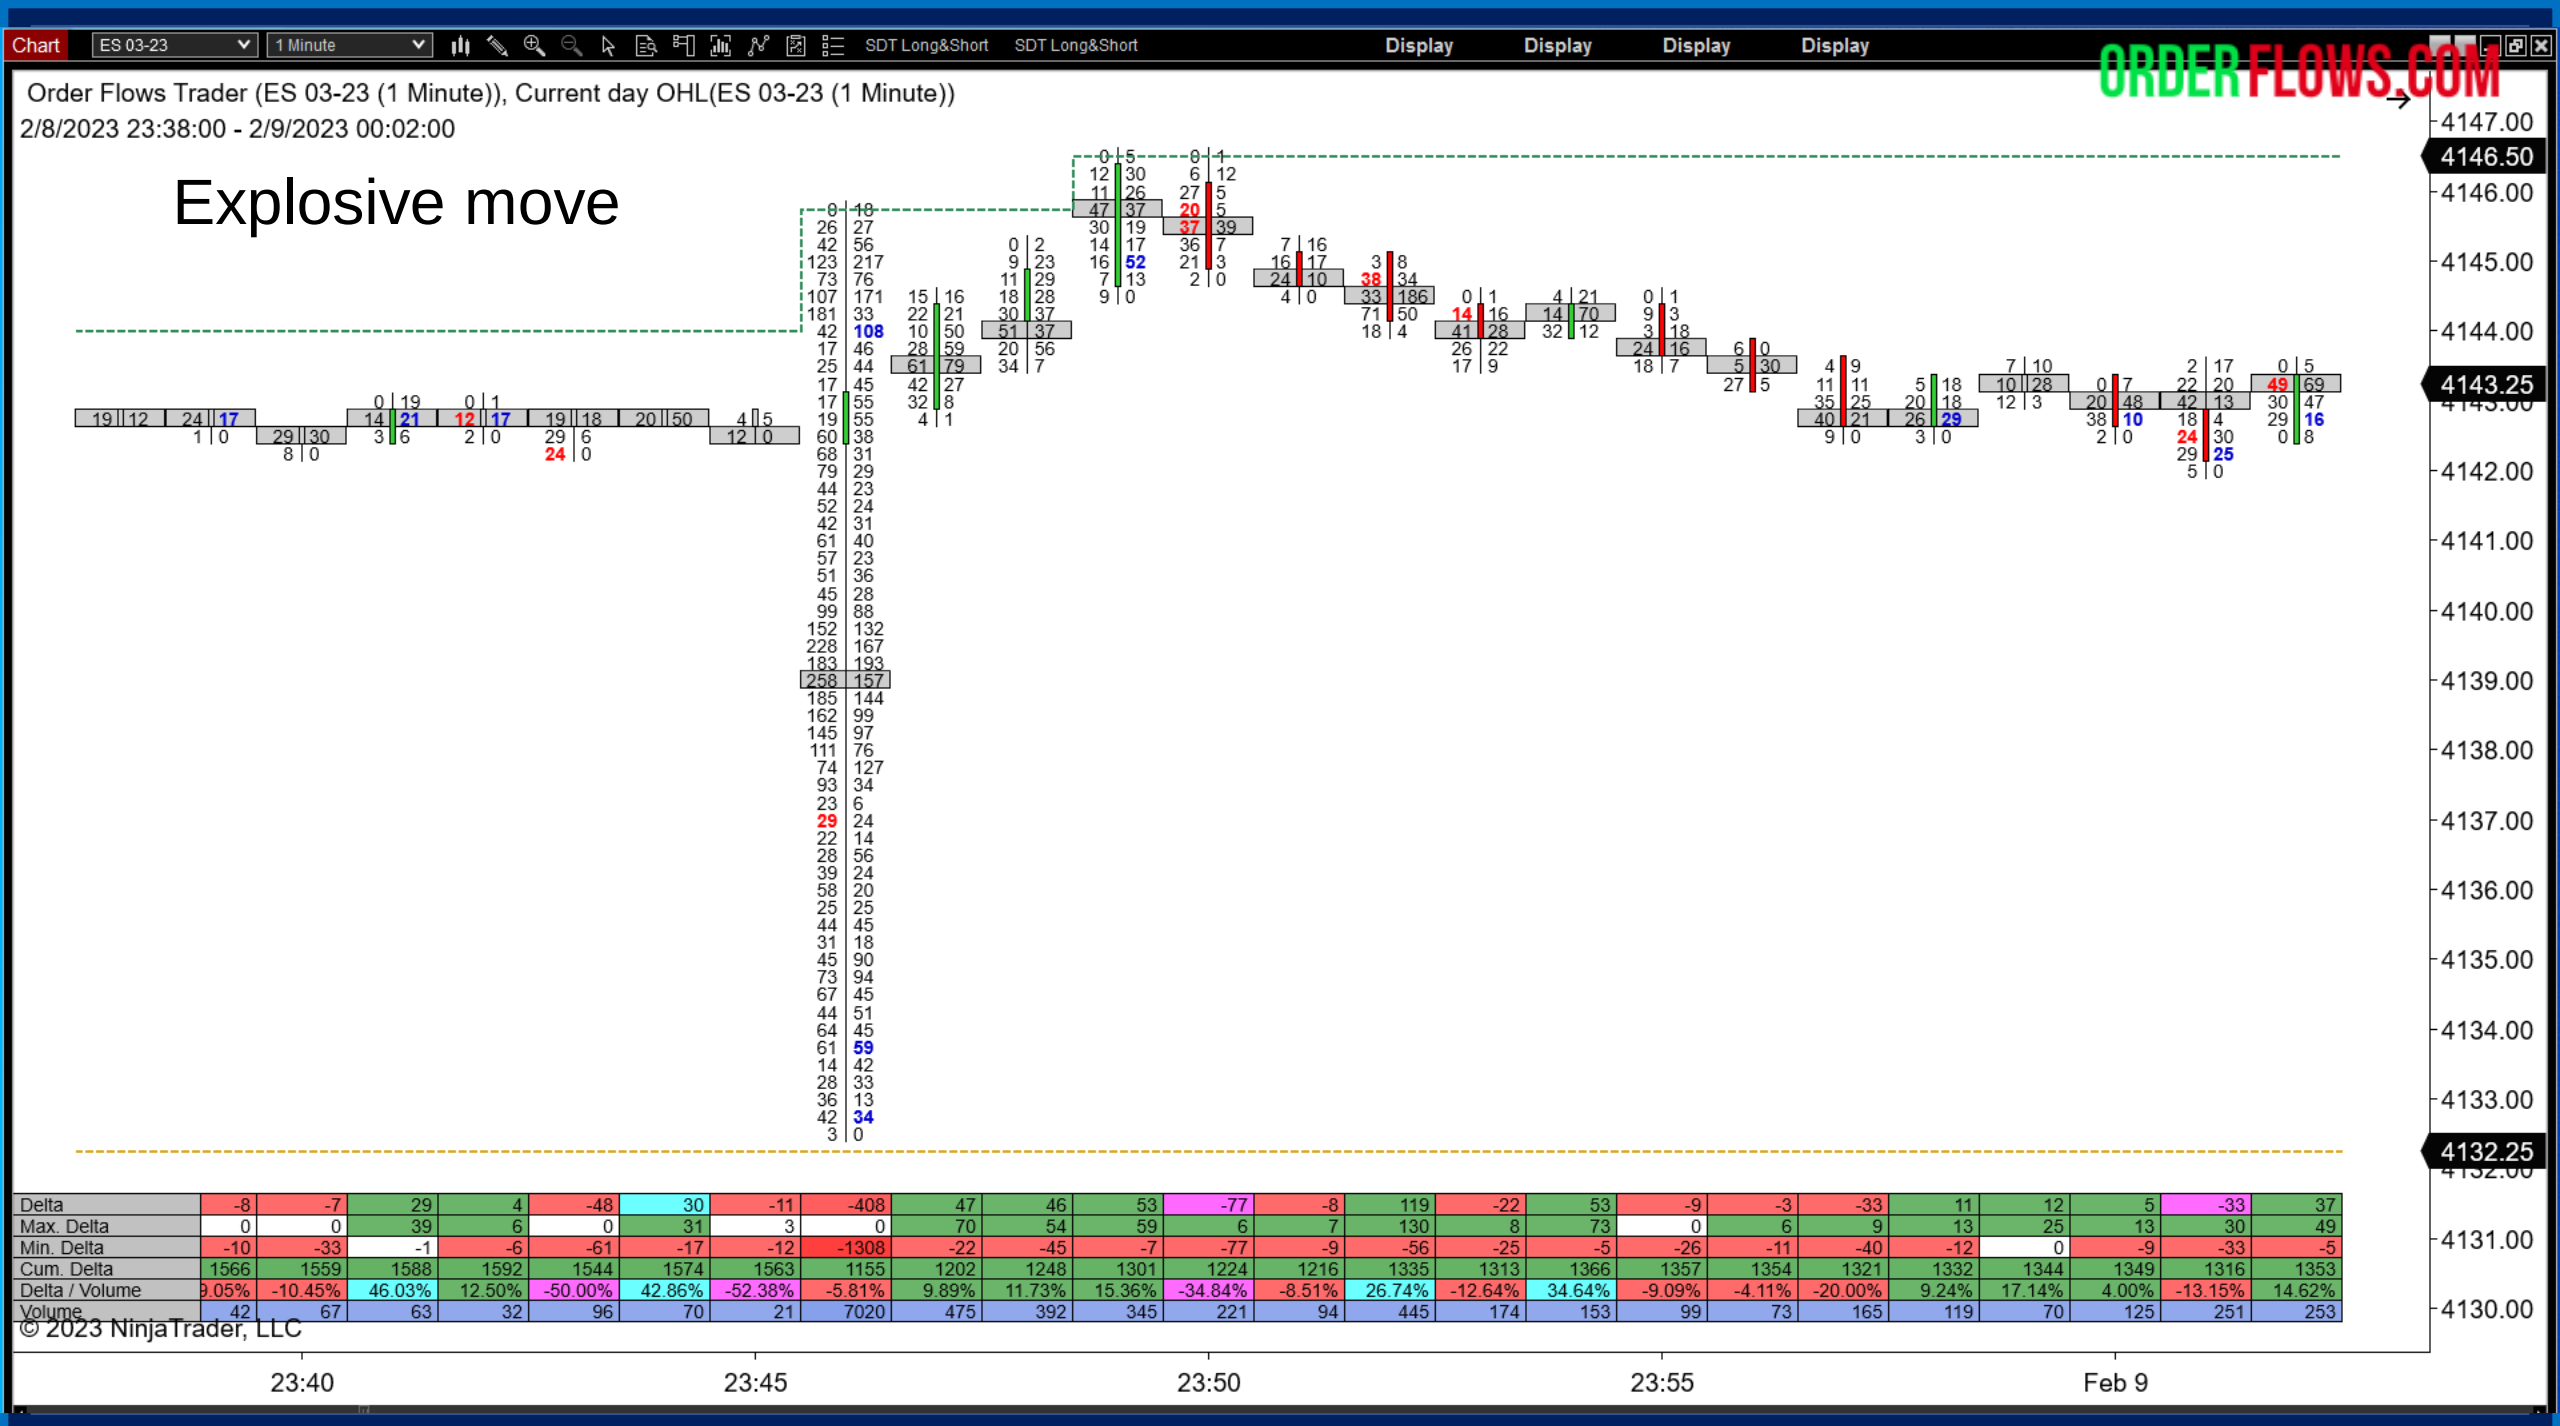

You often see similar order flow before big moves.

Explosive moves usually just don't come out of the blue. Most of the time (not always) the market reveals some clues for traders in the order flow. The problem lies in knowing what to look for in the order flow. If you don't know what you are looking at in the order flow, then you are wasting your time.

Most traders think that there is a quantifiable pattern a market leaves just before an explosive move. If they can find it they will have found the holy grail.

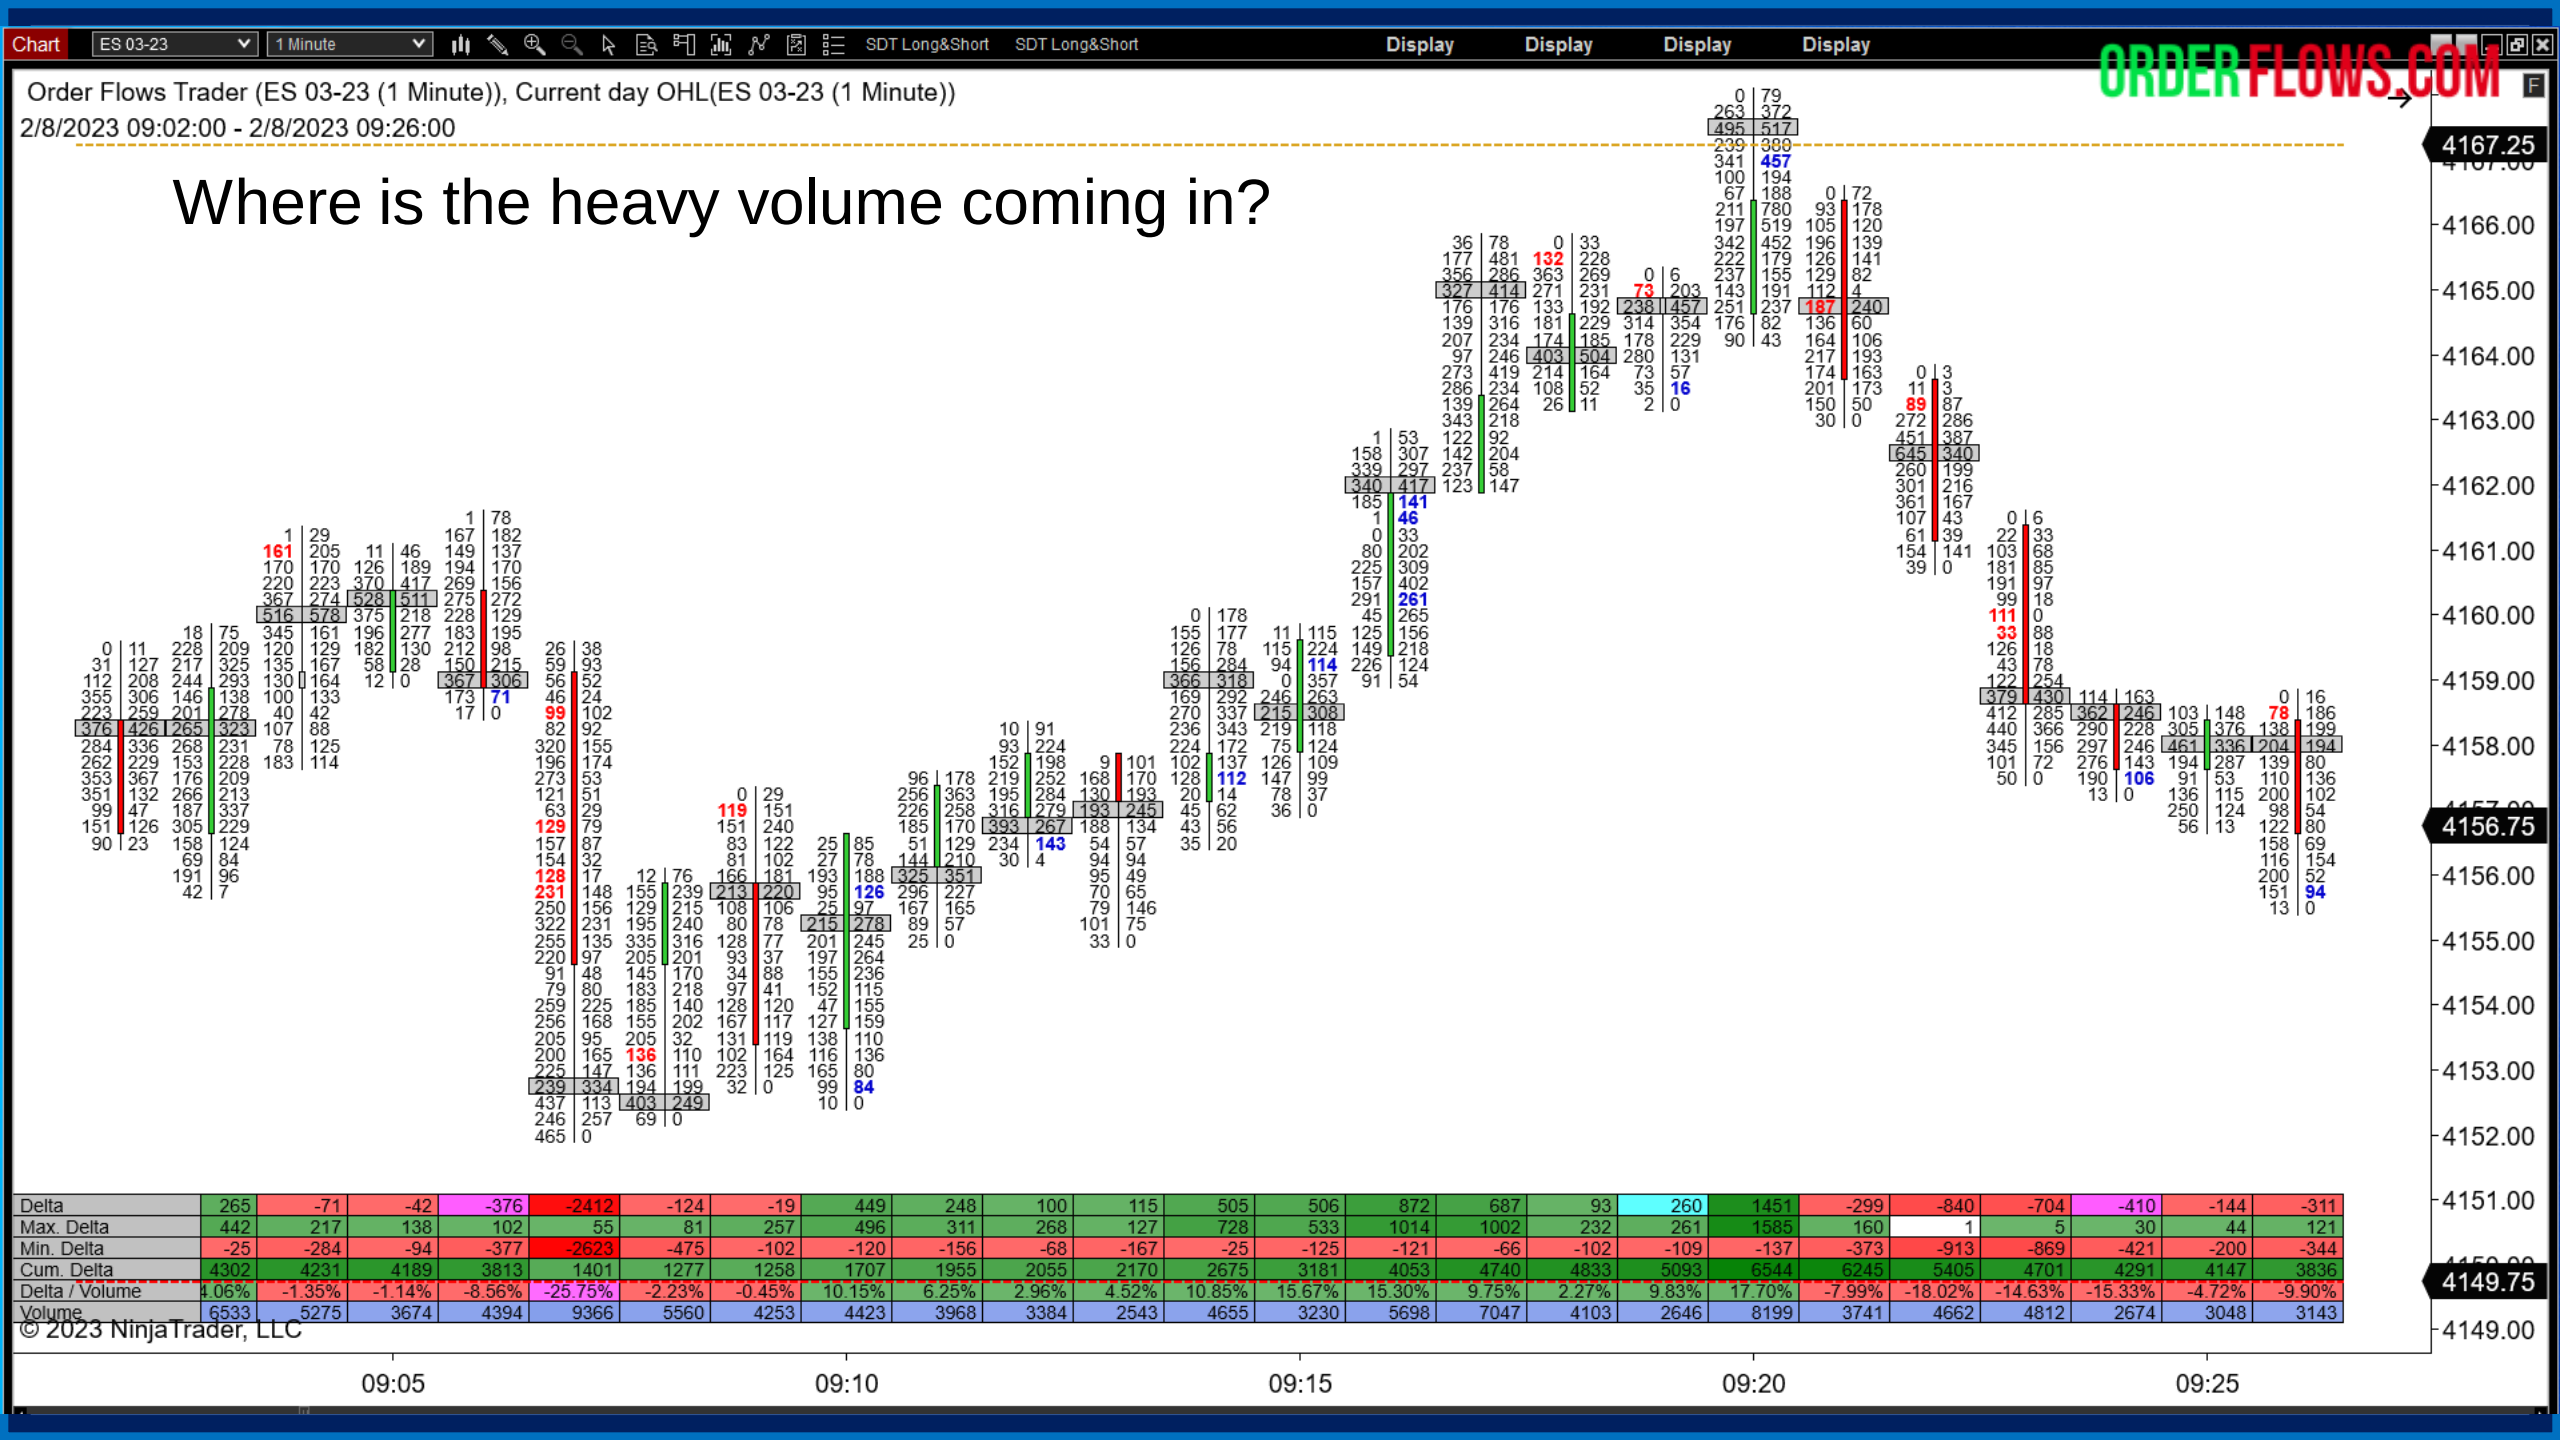

The problem is that just because there is a clearly identifiable pattern that comes just before an explosive move, it doesn't mean that every time that pattern appears will have an explosive move. They can go sideways or in the opposite direction and fast.

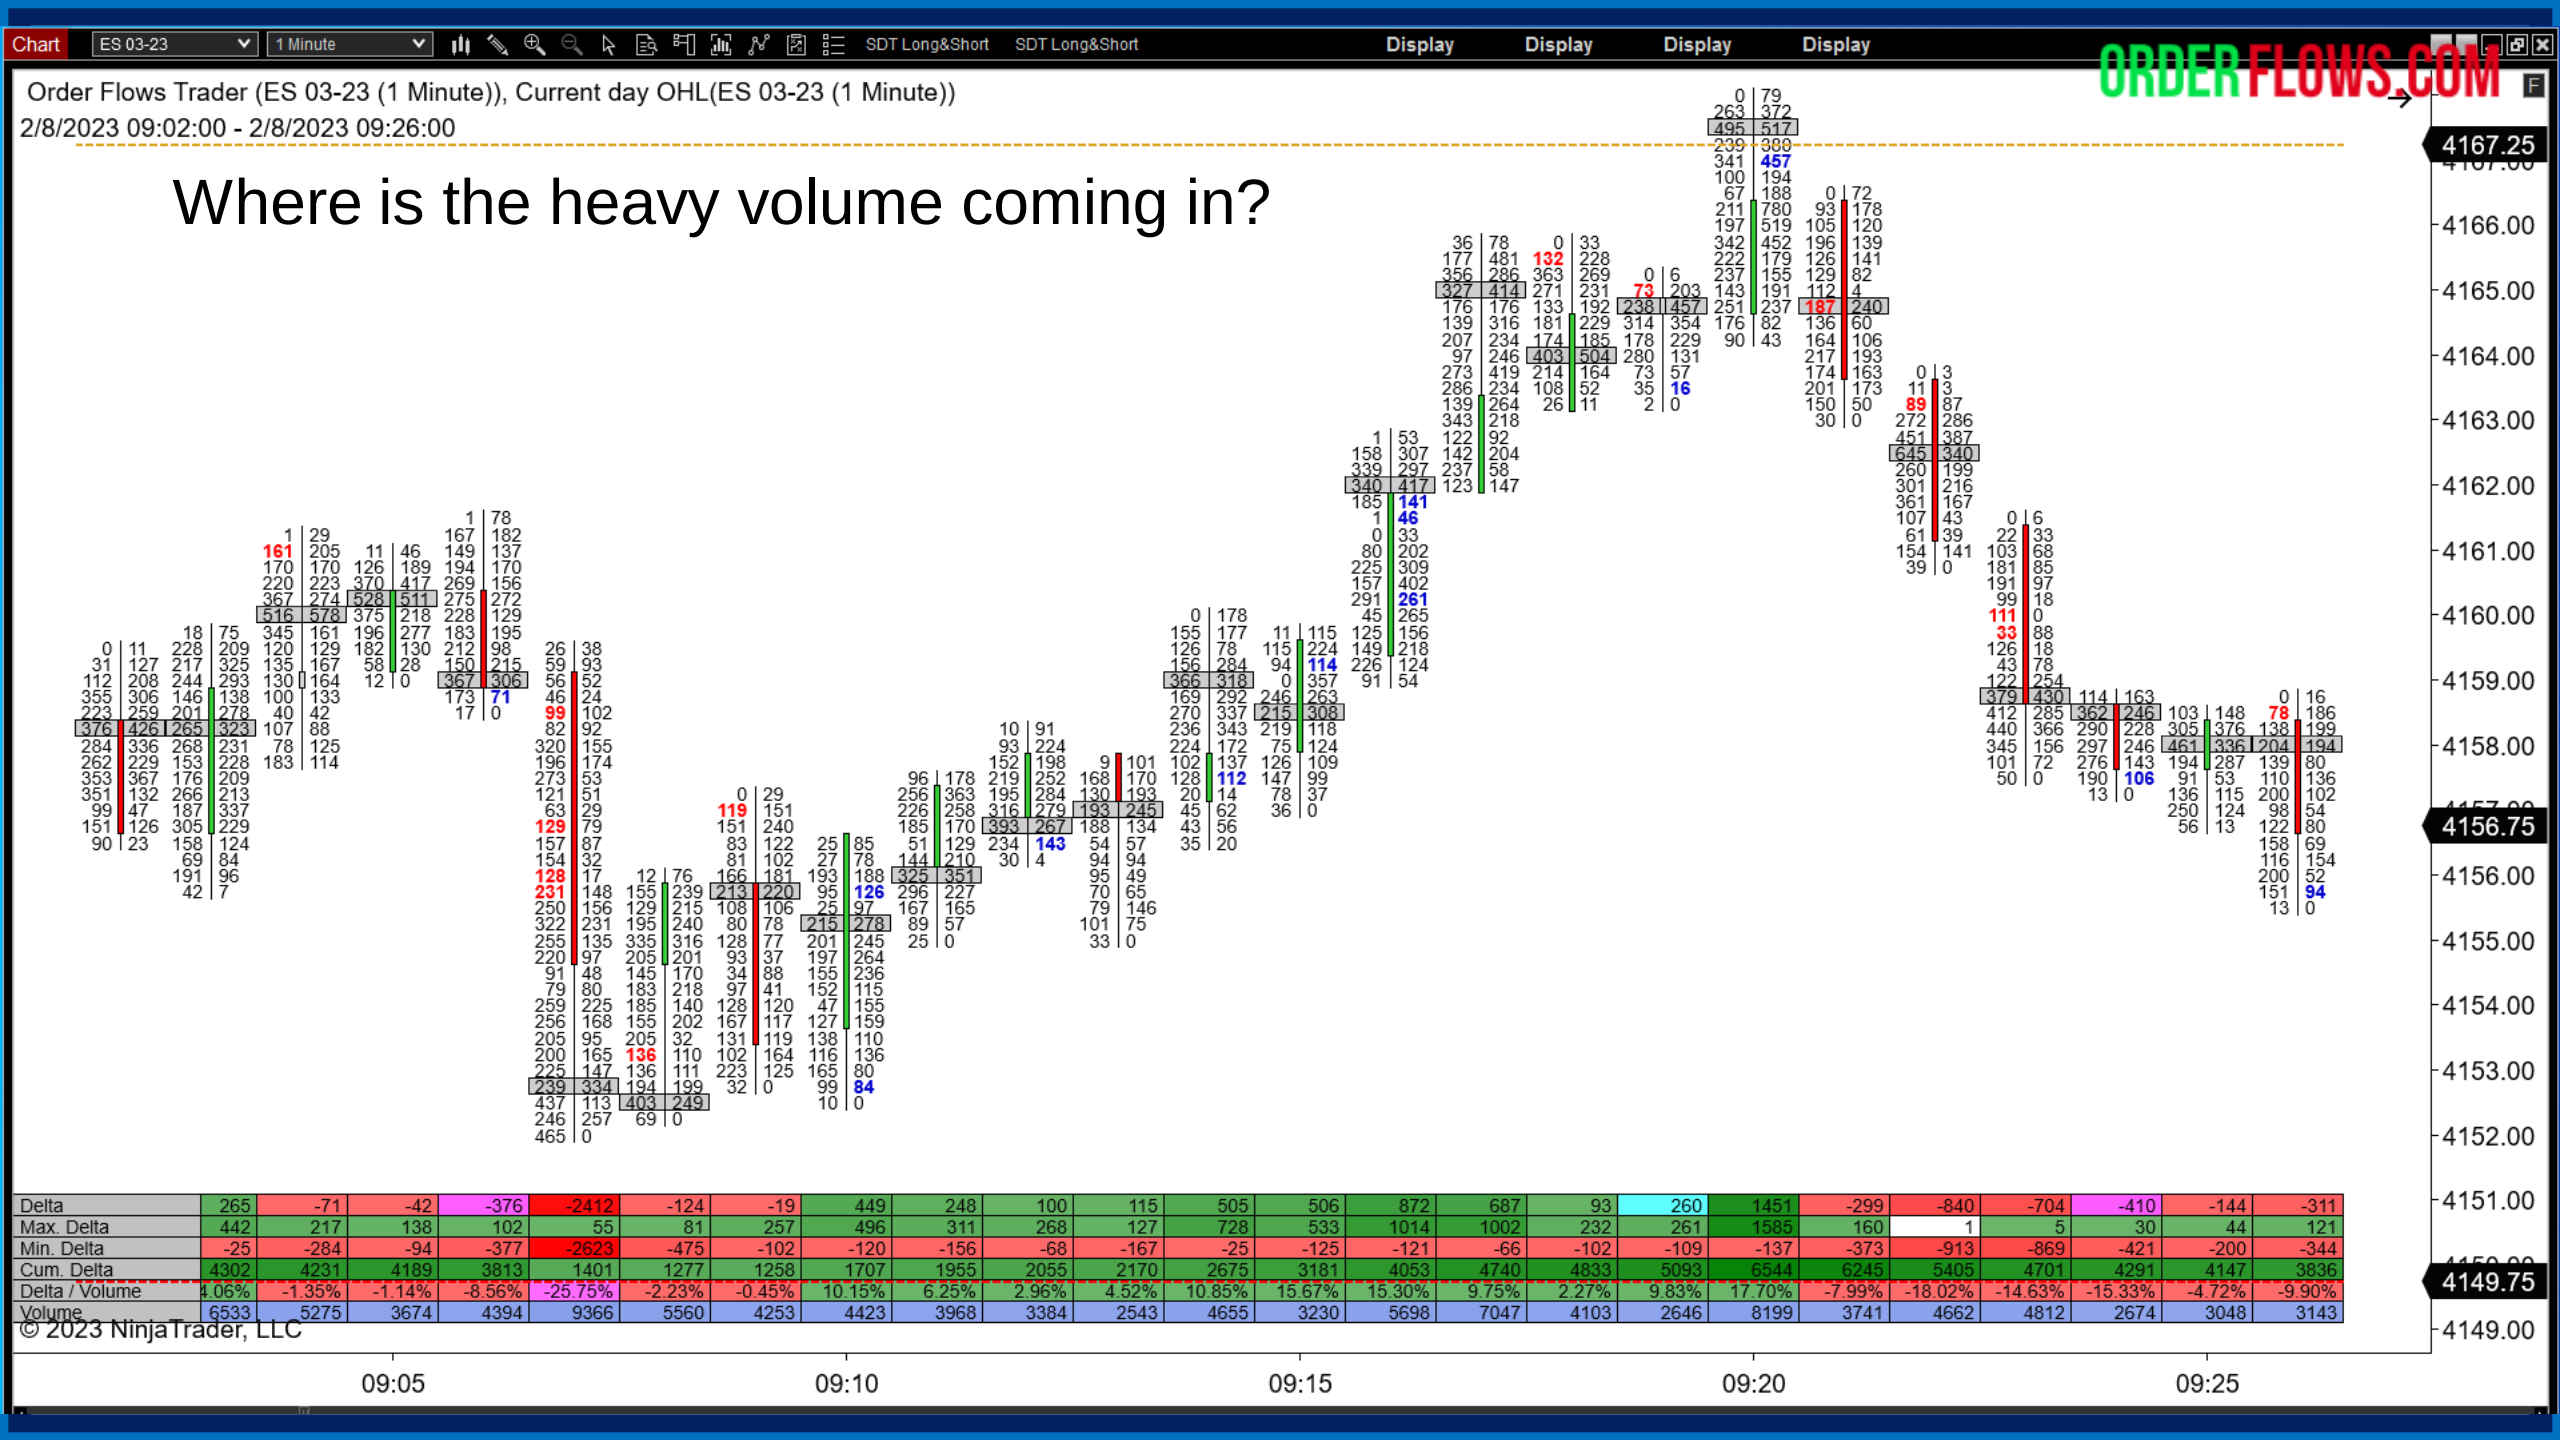

Therein lies the problem with momentum trading systems. Its the assumption that strong short term moves are preceeded by particular acceleration in price. The problem is that after the accelerated move price pauses and can result in a pullback.

In physics, momentum is calculated by multiplying the mass of an object by its velocity to determine how likely it will continue. In trading, momentum is often capped with heavy volume. Why? Because the market found liquidity. Once the market finds liquidity, it can facilitate trade.

Newton's law of motion states an object in motion tends to stay in motion until an external forces is applied to it. A market that is in motion (moving up or down) continues its trend until something is there to stop it. Trends stop when that trend loses enough strength (lack of aggressive volume) or something (strong liquidity – stopping volume) comes in the stop it.

We are not searching for long-term momentum, we are day traders, we are just looking for momentum.

Momentum strategies work in most market conditions since they are independent of what is happening in the market.

Most of the time momentum is about detecting herd mentality.

How to determine when momentum is slowing down?

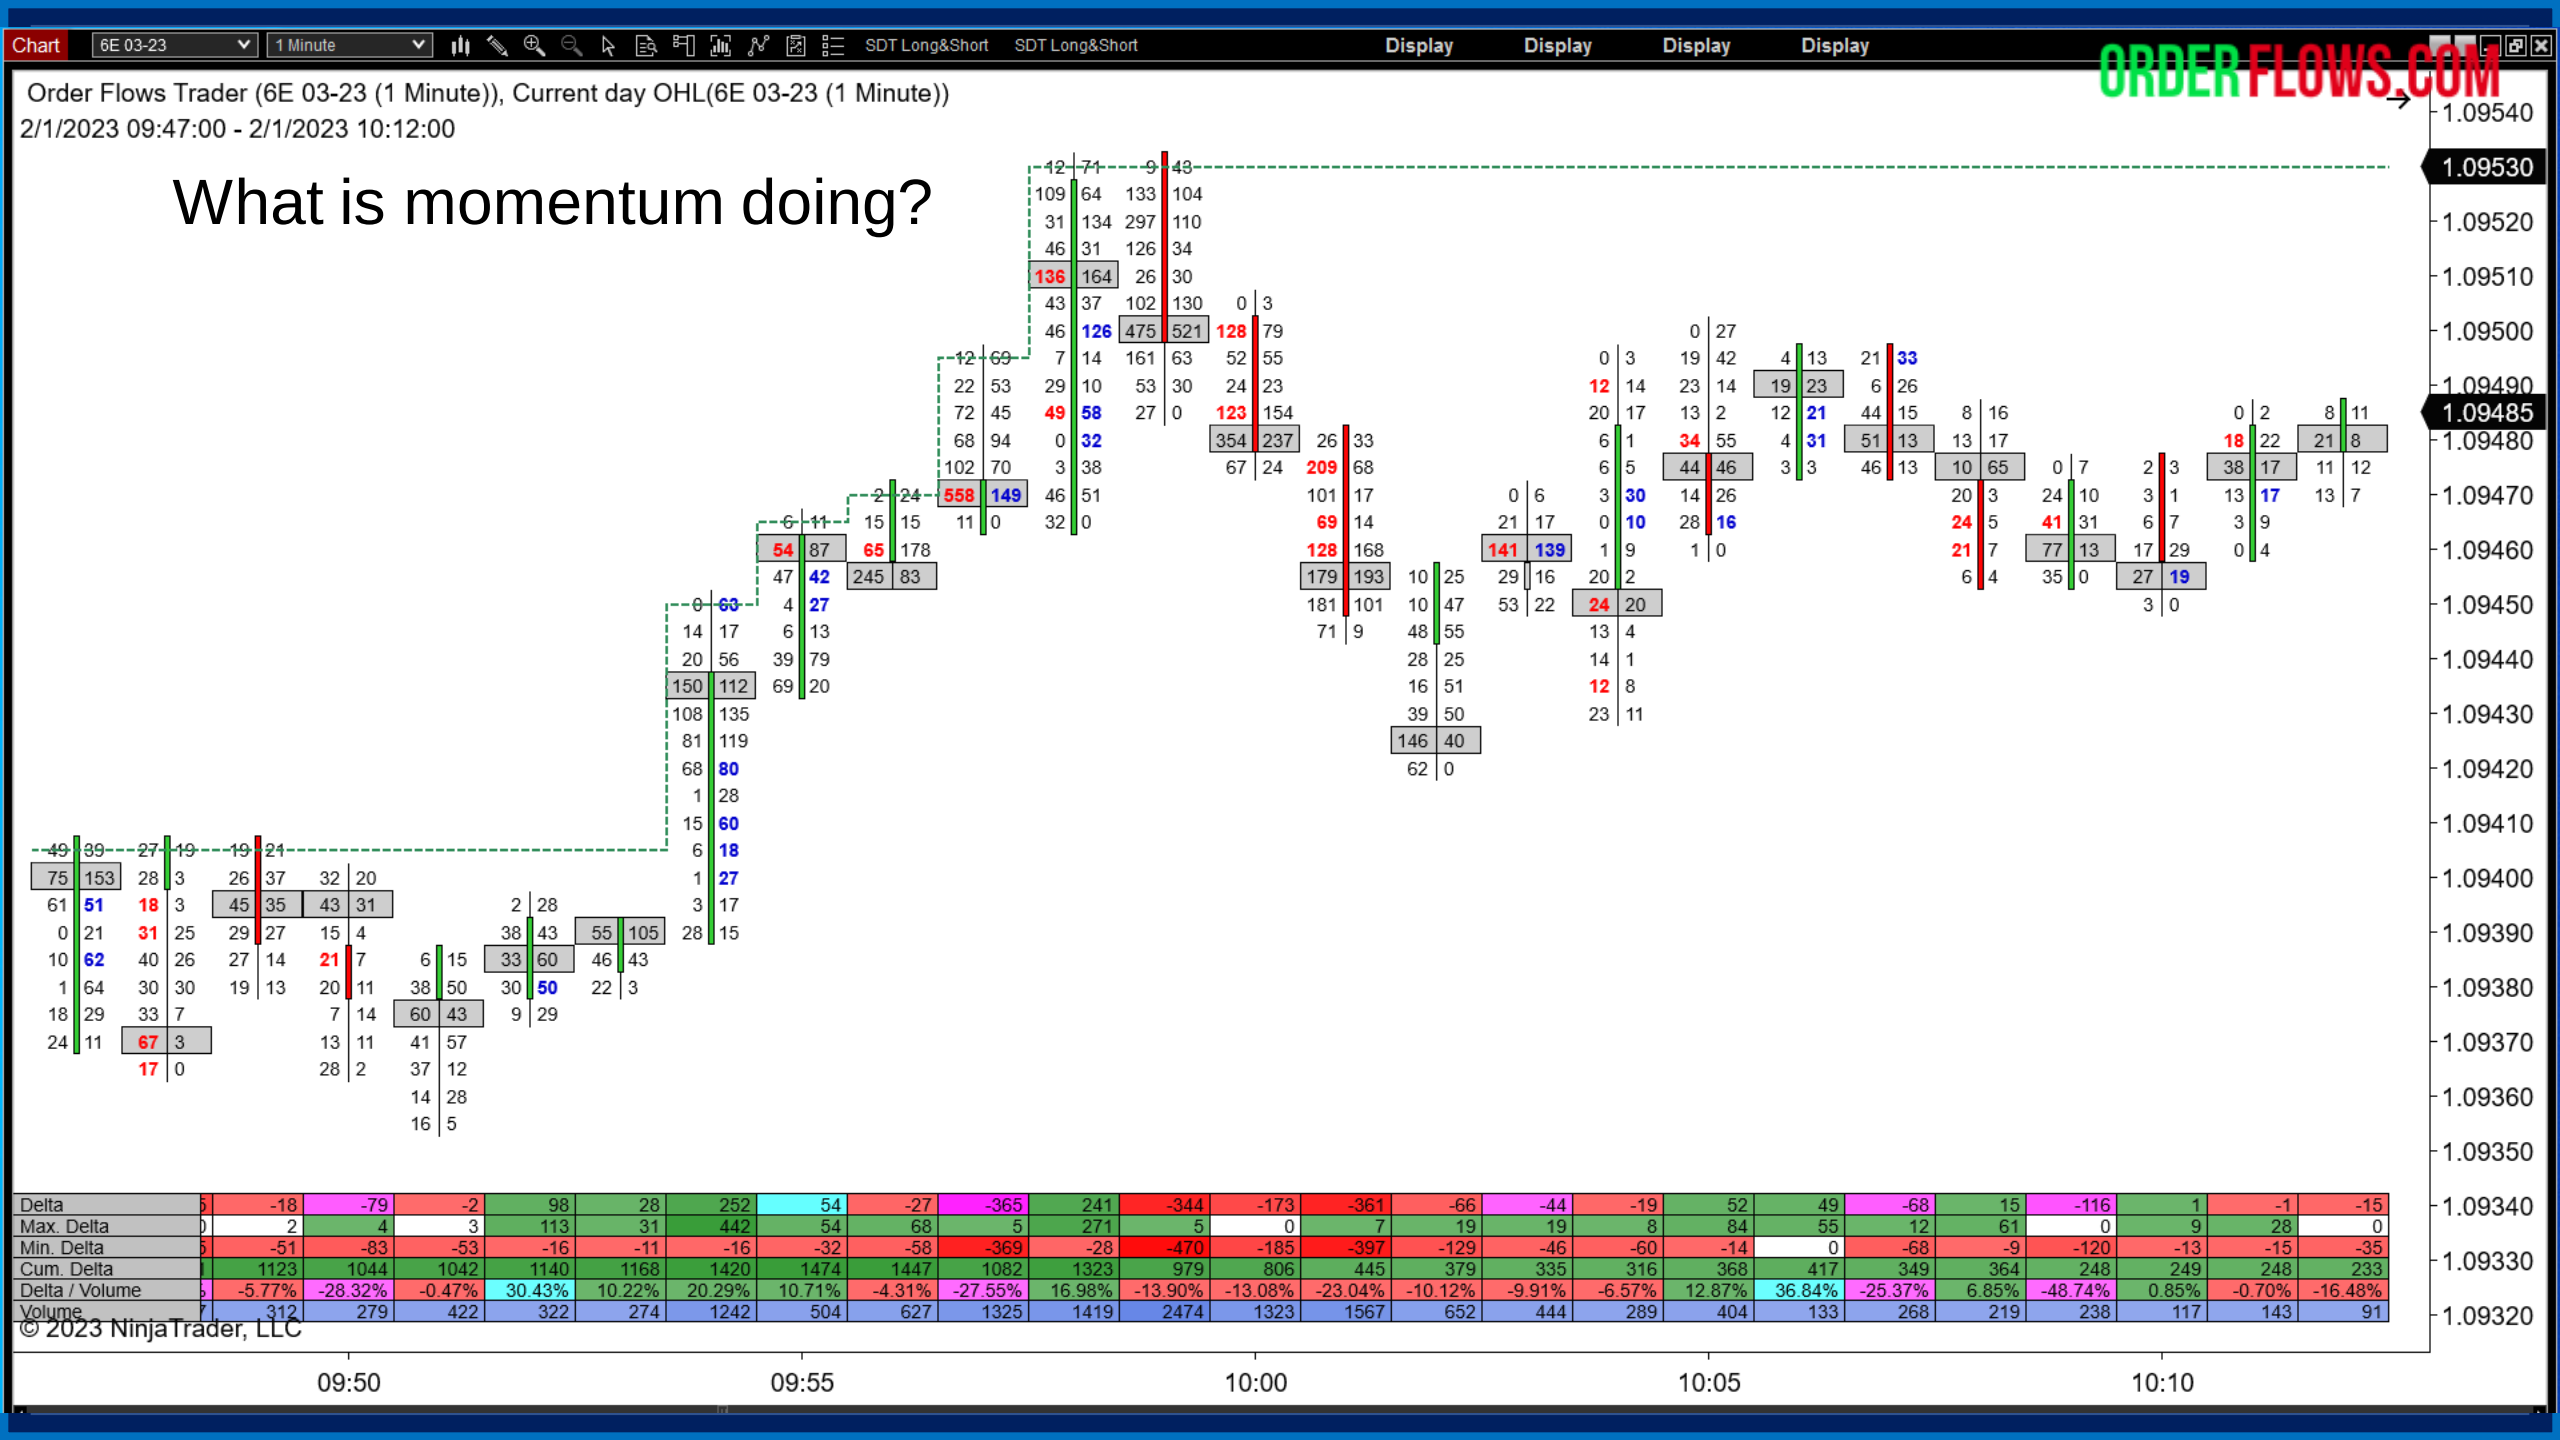

If price is moving higher and volume is getting heavier, then the market has found liquidity.

What is delta doing?

What is POC doing?

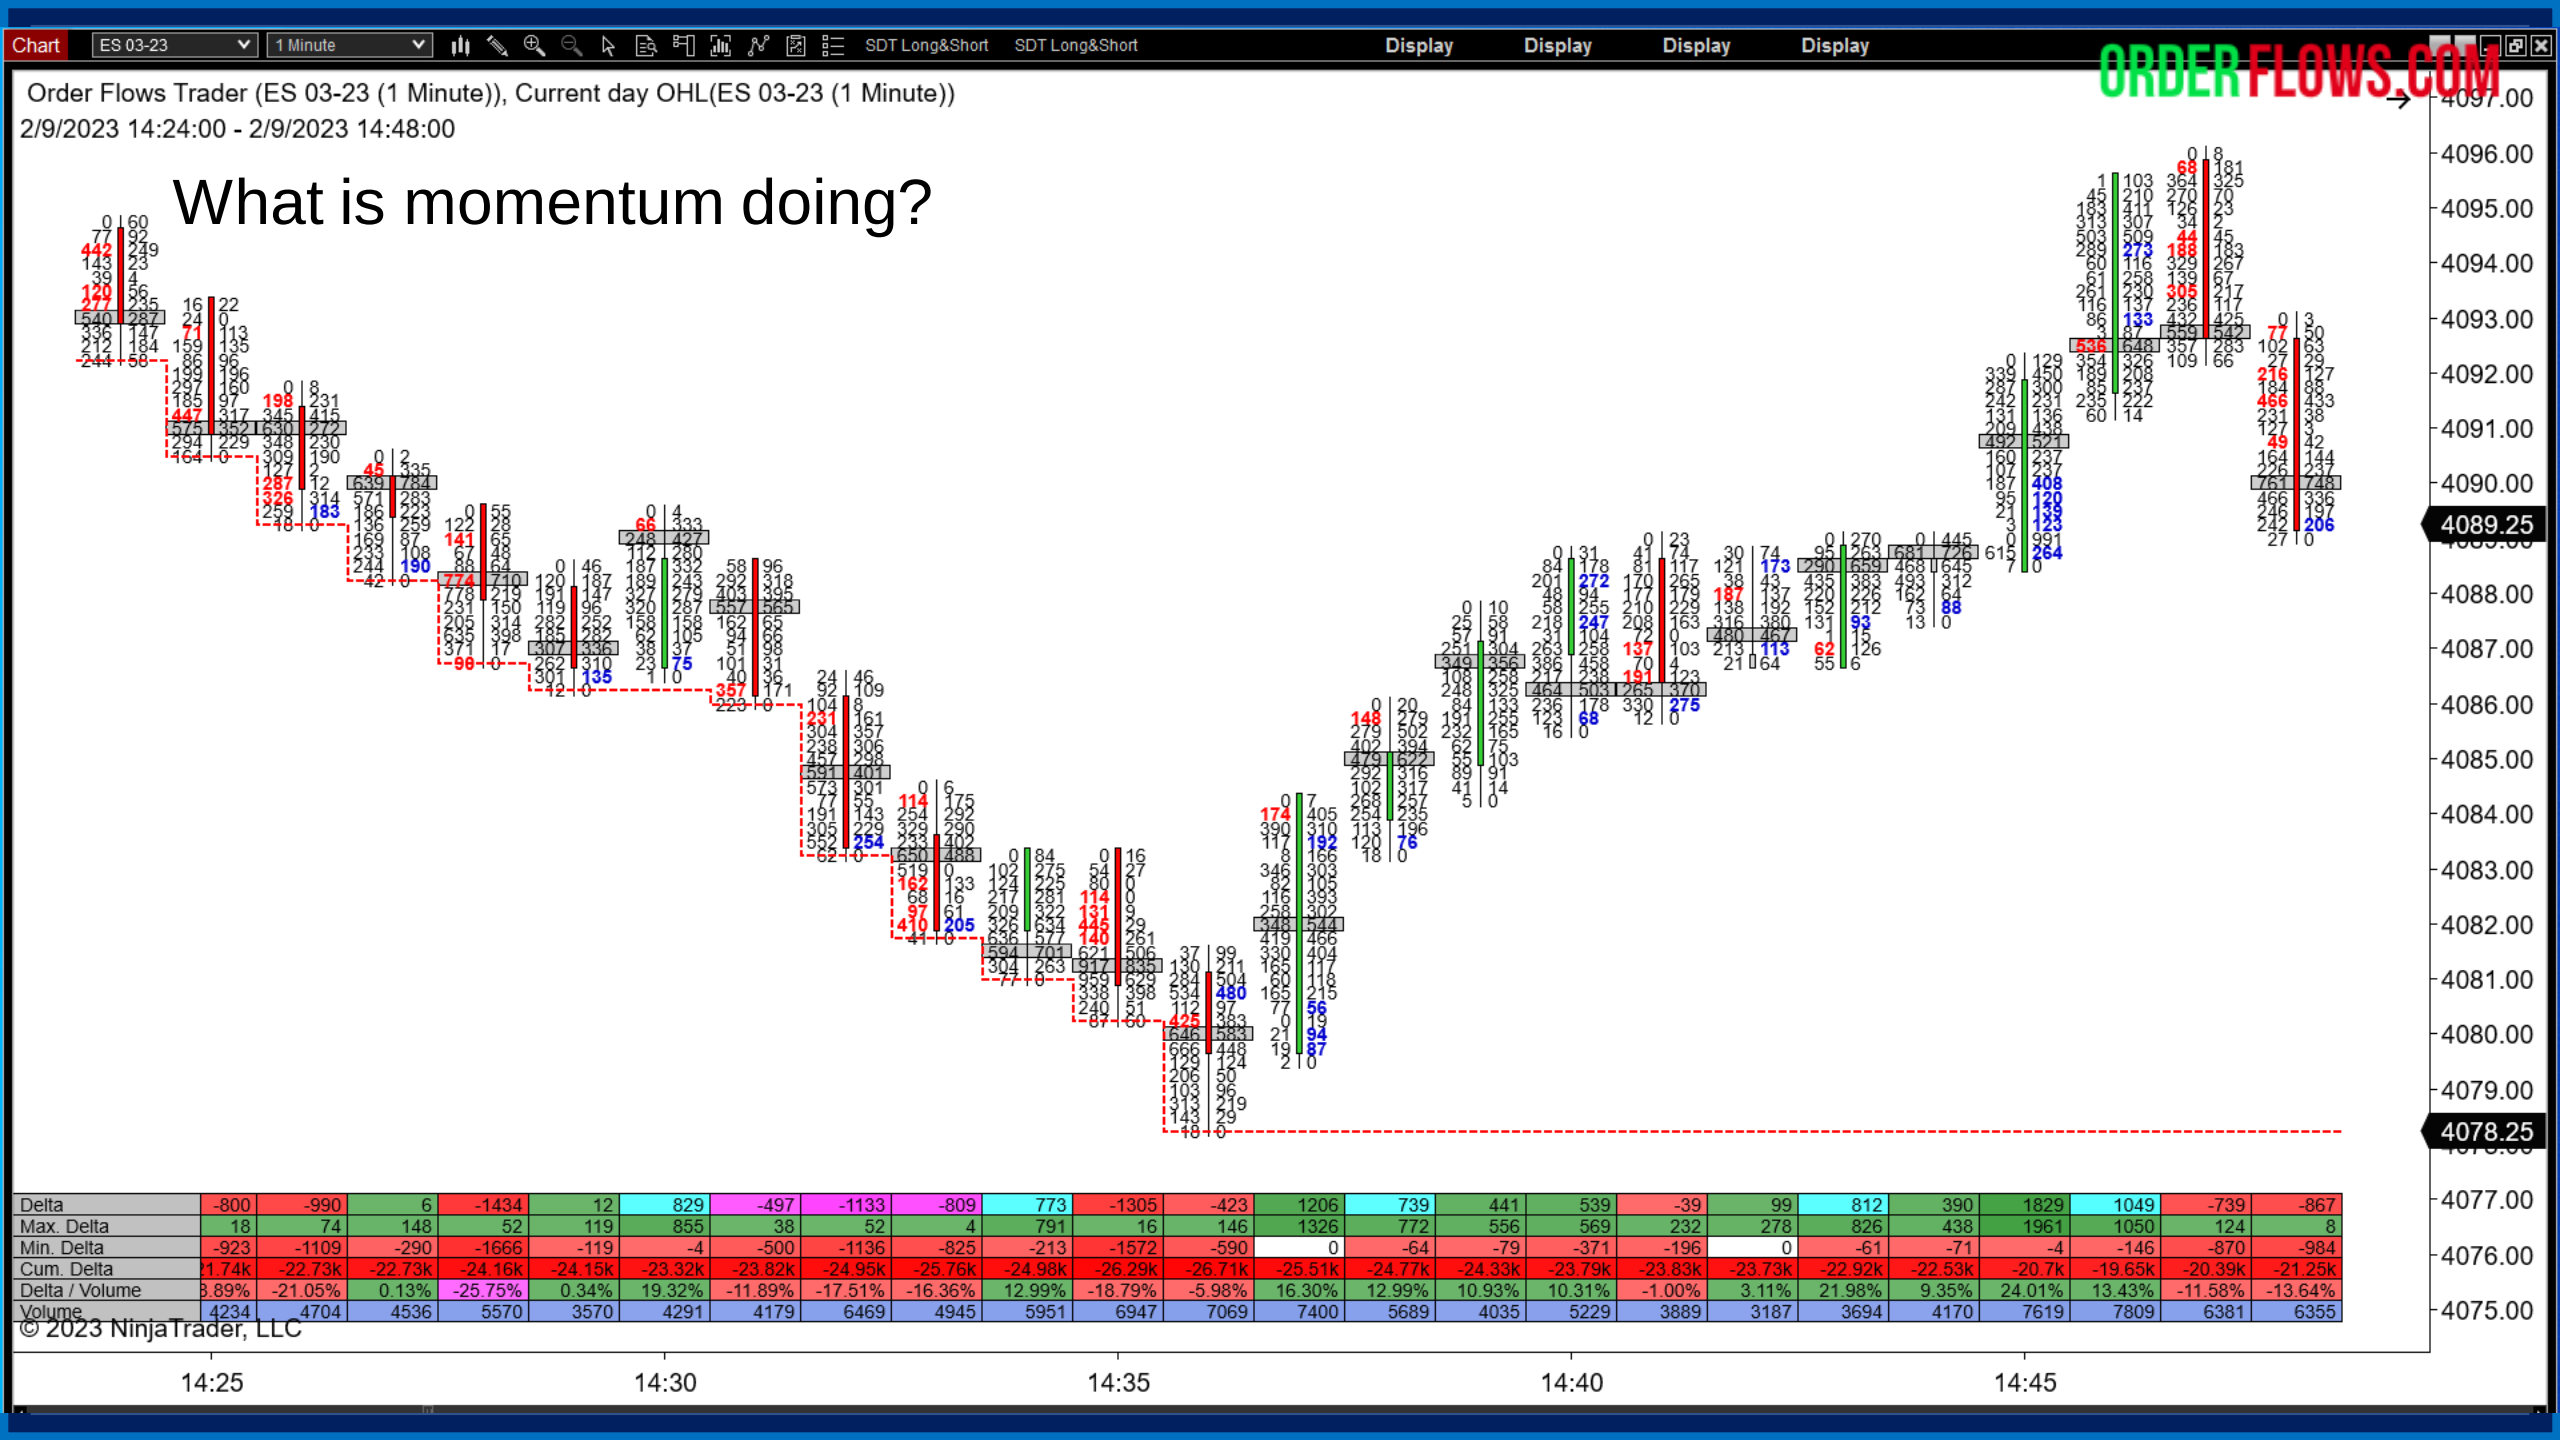

What are imbalances doing?

Will a breakout succeed or fail? Look for momentum. If there is a sign of momentum on a breakout from a chart pattern indicates strength in the move. If there is no real momentum behind the breakout, it means the breakout is probably false.

Time allows market participants to react and get used to new price levels.
When price is moving fast and leaving thin spots in the footprint it is important to note that price hasn't come back to those areas and is instead putting in heavy volume at new levels.

After momentum takes place there is often a correction that attempts to fix an exaggerated move by pulling prices back to the balance principles of supply and demand.

Price generally moves in an orderly fashion, when there is a dramatic rise in price, when the market gets ahead of itself, a correction takes place.

A correction essentially recalibrates the market's rate of ascent or descent to its normal manner in normal conditions.

Momentum should be used to assess a trending market condition. When a market is consolidating, momentum indicators will give many failed signals. If you are trying to trade momentum in an environment that is not conducive to a trend, then there will be no strength or essentially the momentum will suffocate by lack of oxygen.

Look at momentum from the order flow – what is actually trading in the market, instead of trying mathematical gymnastics to see it.
