Order Flow Blueprint: Momentum & Reversal Course

Module 6 – Order Flow Exits

Disclaimer

This course is for educational and informational purposes only and should not be considered a solicitation to buy or sell a futures contract or make any other type of investment decision. Futures trading contains substantial risk and is not for every investor. An investor could potentially lose all or more than the initial investment. Risk capital is money that can be lost without jeopardizing ones financial security or life style. Only risk capital should be used for trading and only those with sufficient risk capital should consider trading. Past performance is not necessarily indicative of future results.

CFTC Rules 4.41 - Hypothetical or Simulated performance results have certain limitations, unlike an actual performance record, simulated results do not represent actual trading. Also, since the trades have not been executed, the results may have under-or-over compensated for the impact, if any, of certain market factors, such as lack of liquidity. Simulated trading programs in general are also subject to the fact that they are designed with the benefit of hindsight. No representation is being made that any account will or is likely to achieve profit or losses similar to those shown.

How not to trade

Avoid mistakes. Avoiding mistakes is the beginning and the end of successful trading. If you make no mistakes, your chances of success are much higher. But it is very difficult. How many losing trades have been made because of mistakes. But a trader is not a machine and in the heat of trading and under the pressure of a fast moving market, even the best traders may make a mistake.

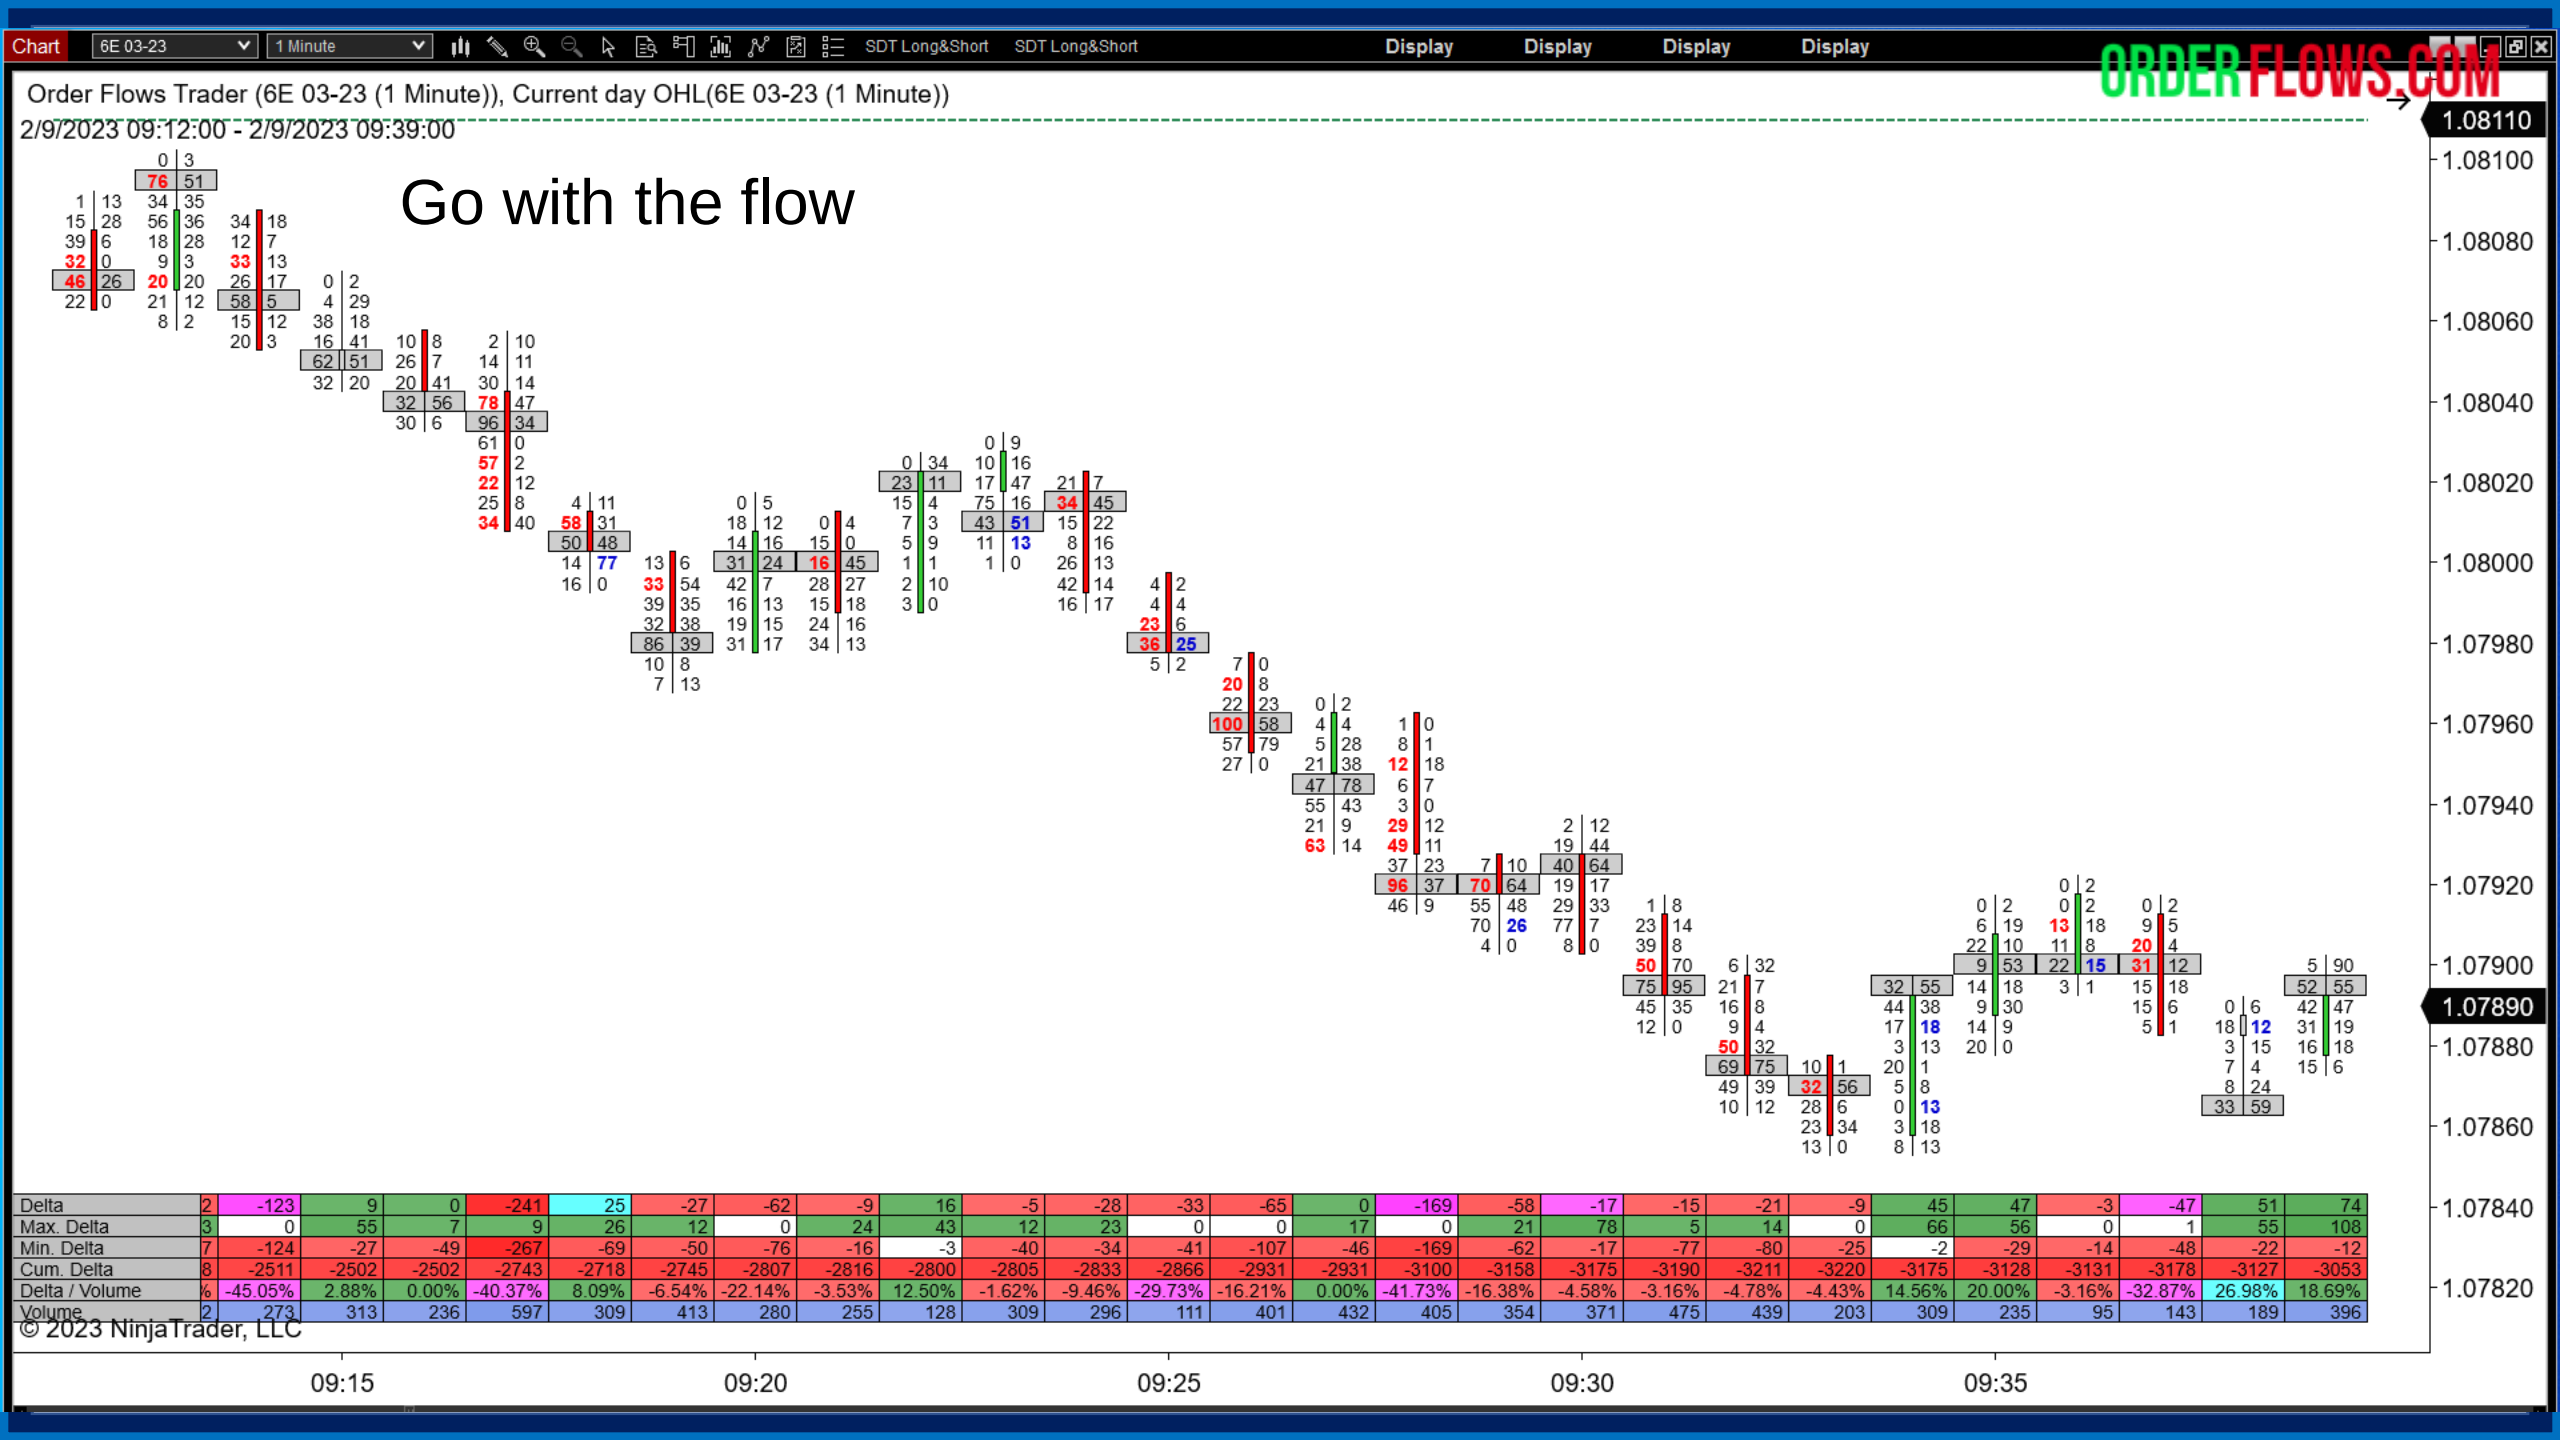

Do not rush to decisions about what the market may do. First get clear on what you want to do. Be clear in your mind what you want to do.

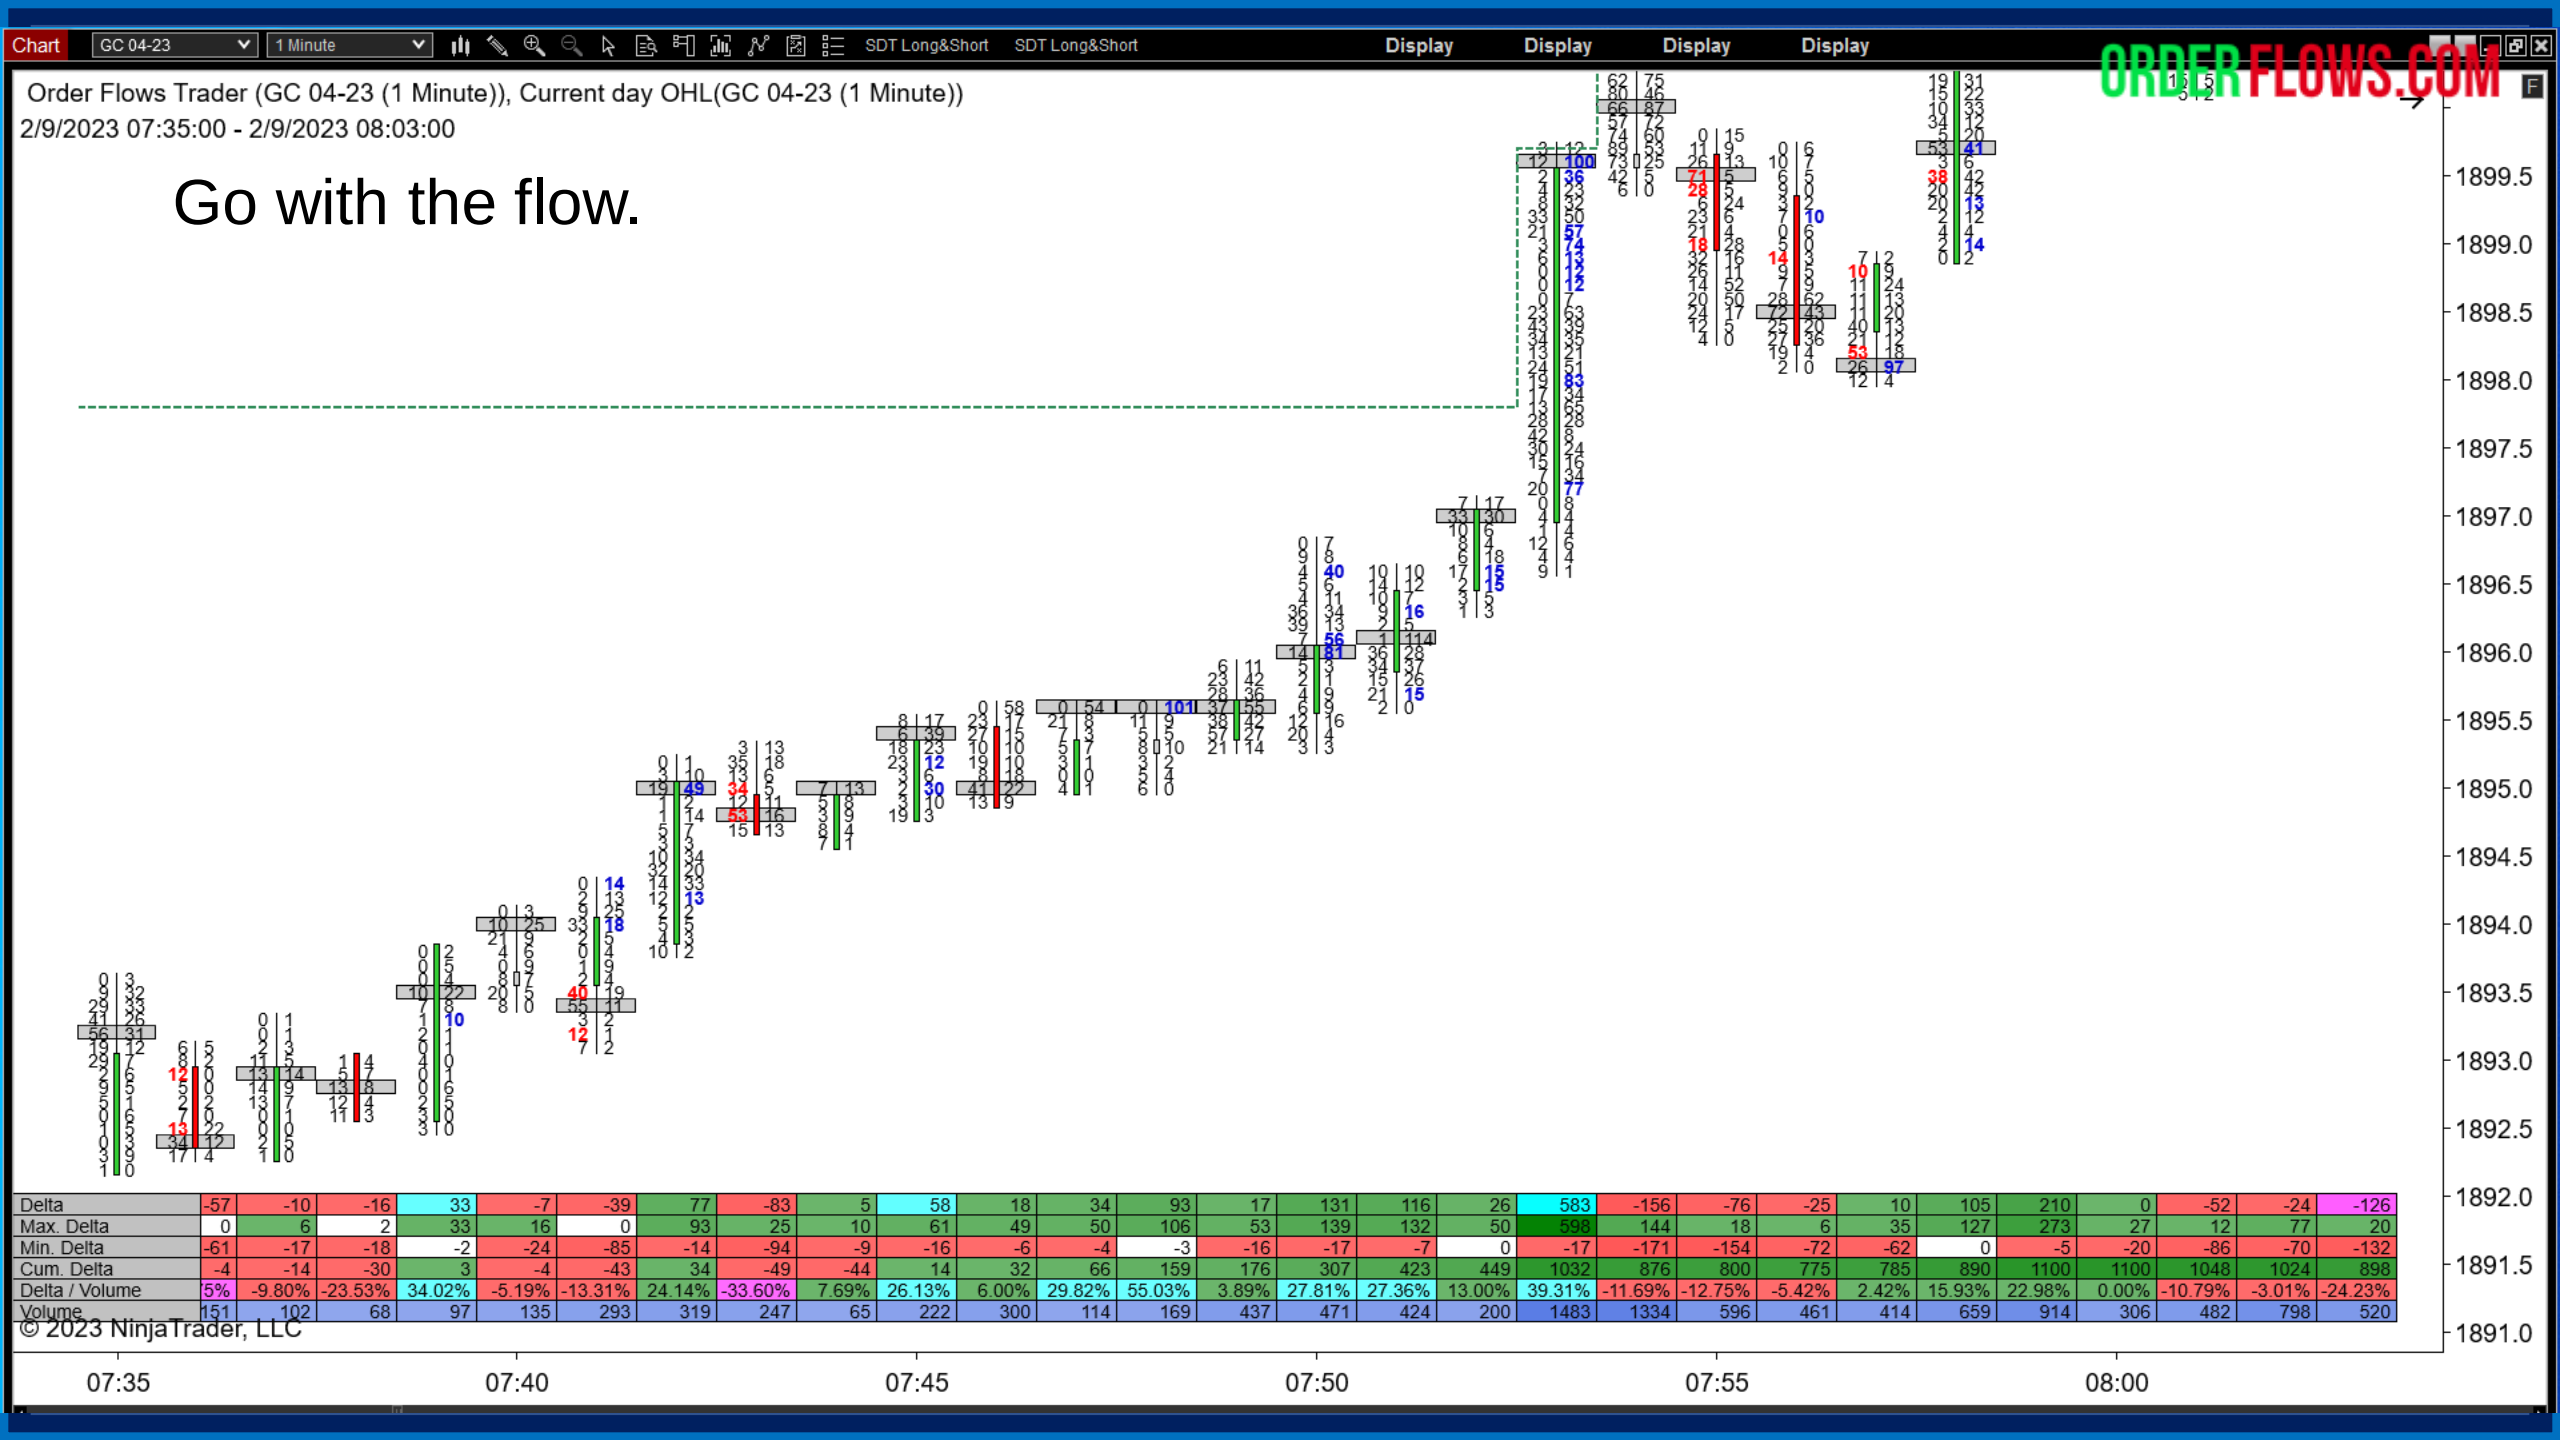

When a market moves in your favor, you should continuously monitor the order flow volume to see if the move is in jeopardy of stopping and reversing.

You should be aiming to maximize the chance of allowing yourself to win. Don't trade more than is necessary to win the same amount, i.e. averaging down.

Hope and desperation are the holes traders descend into right before blowing up the account. The protective stop gets cancelled and the account balance is left undefended at a time when it is most vulnerable.

When you get out of a trade because you followed your rules and then it continues to keep moving, yes you will feel some regret. But at the end of the day you have to stick to your rules to keep those losses small or else one day the loss will not be small and you will blow up.

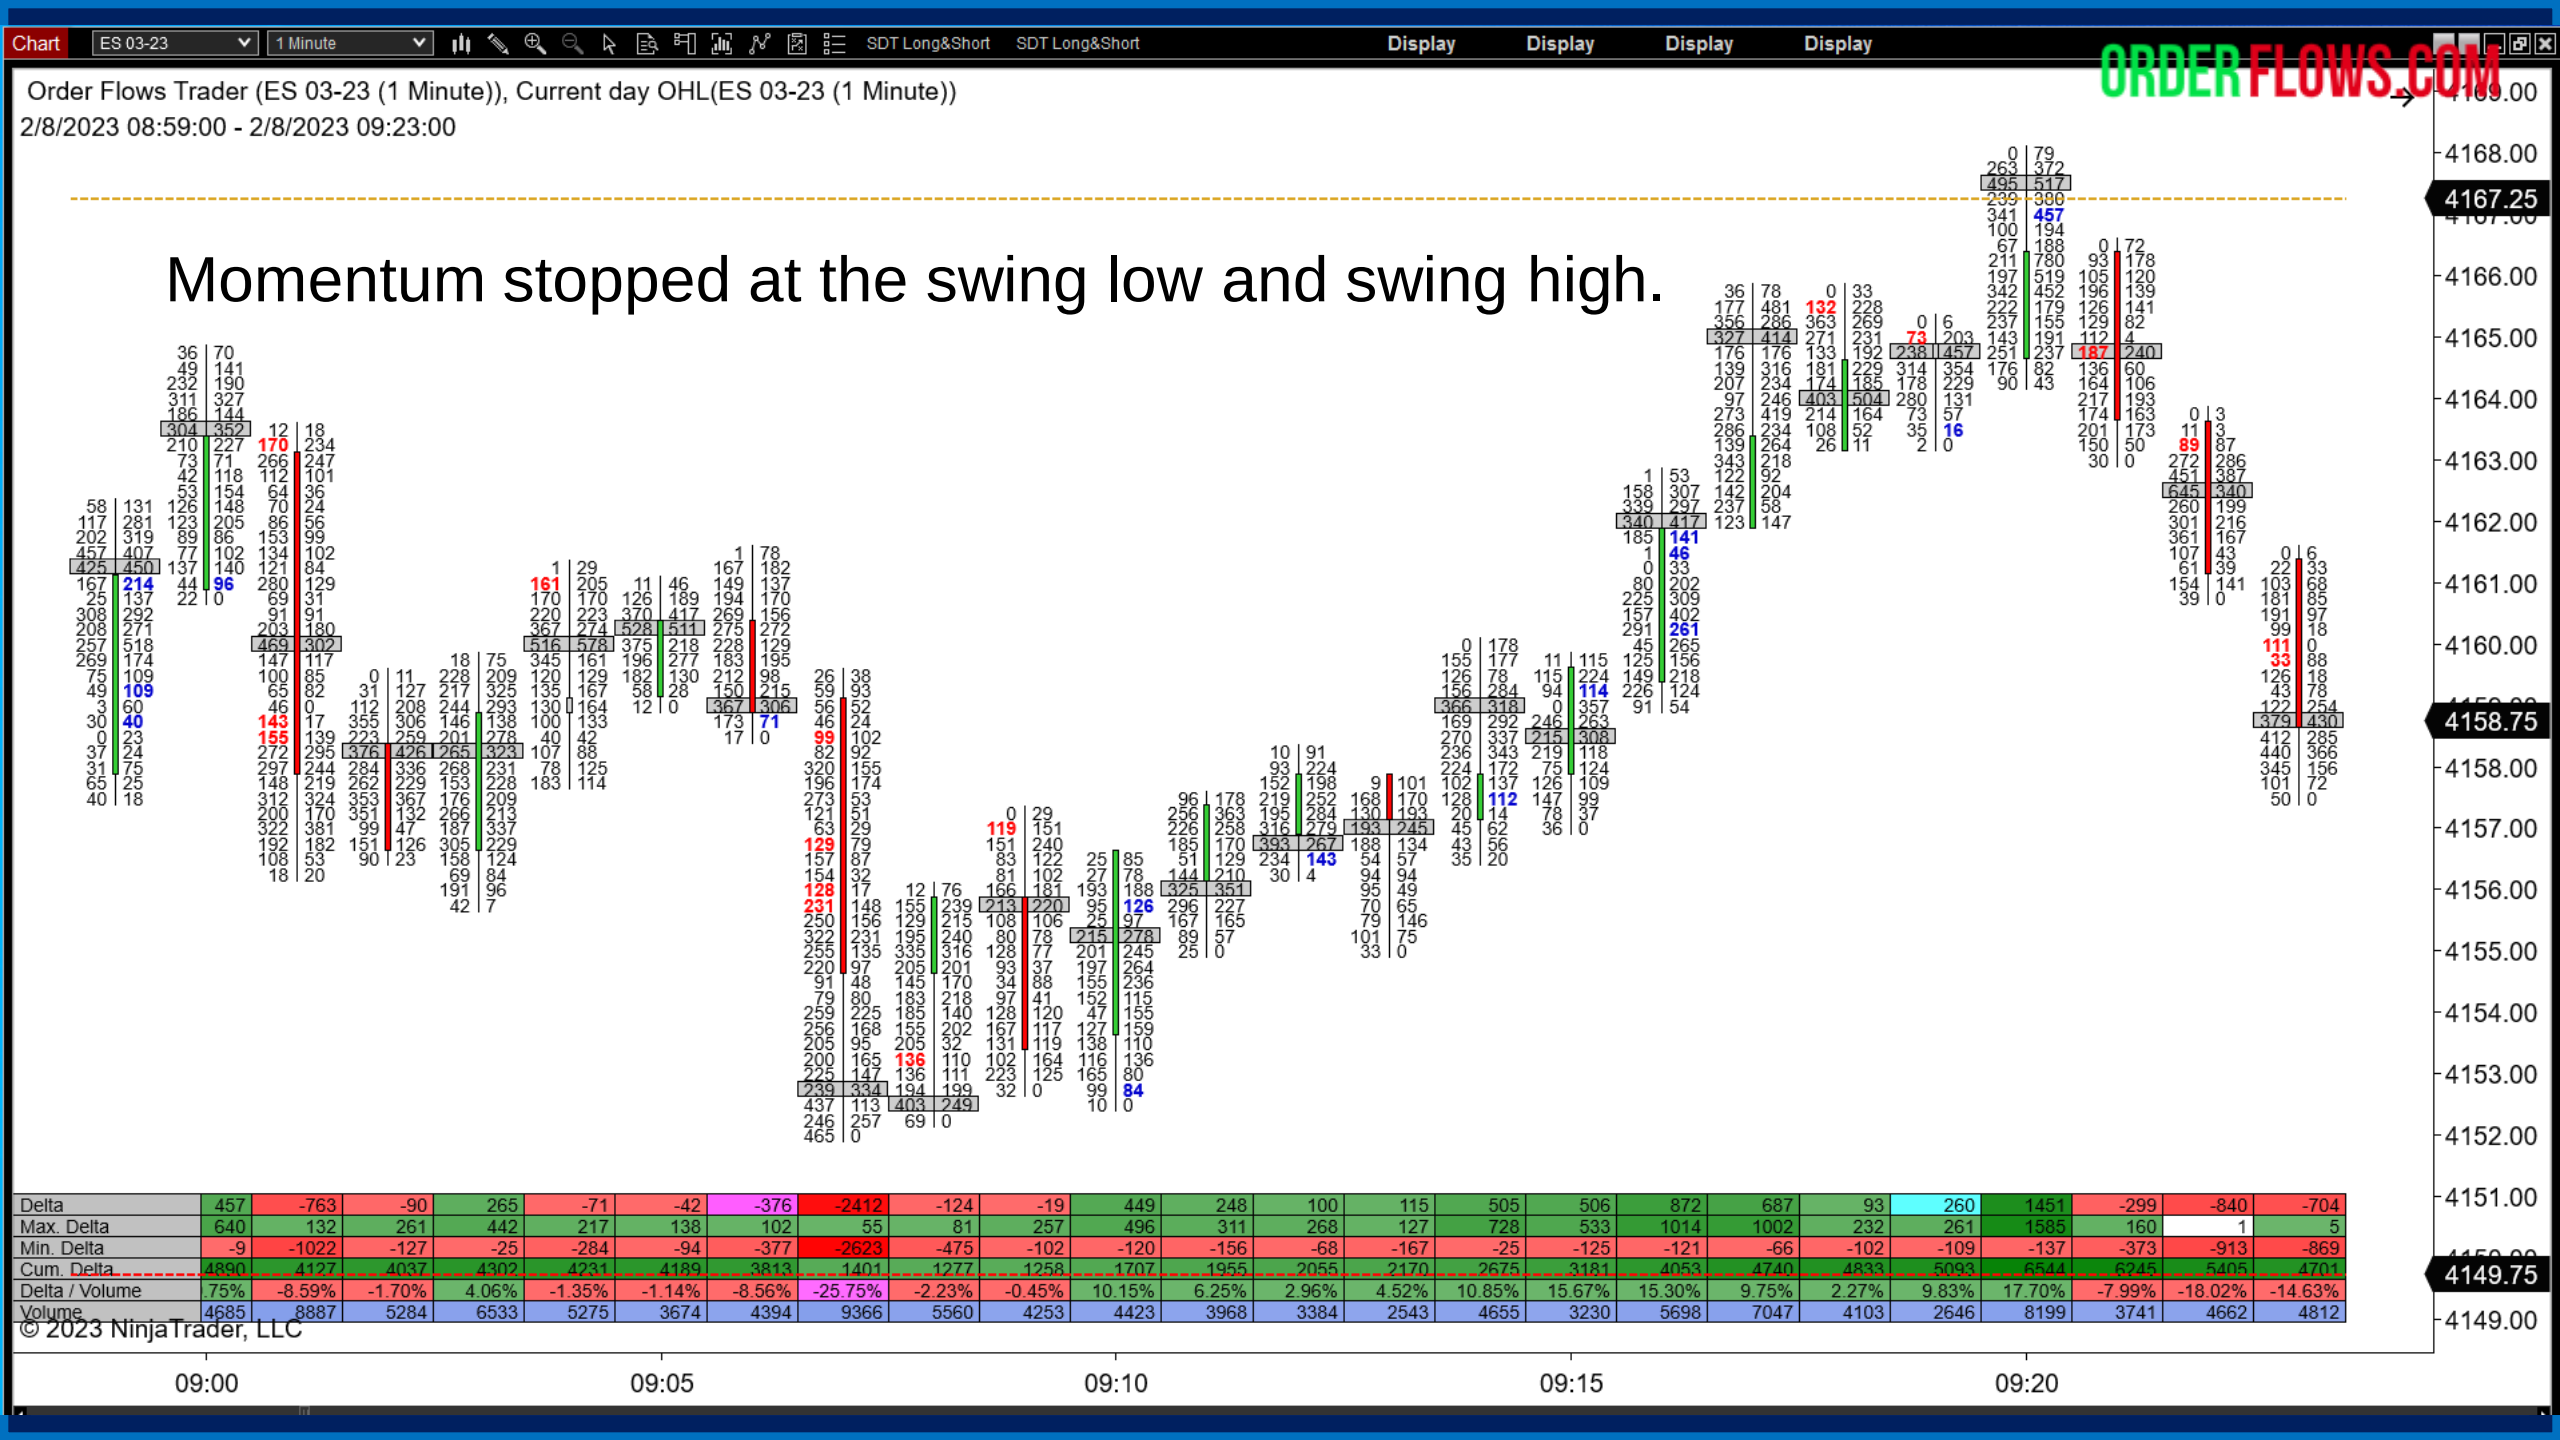

Whether the last trade was good or bad, you have to move onto your next trade.

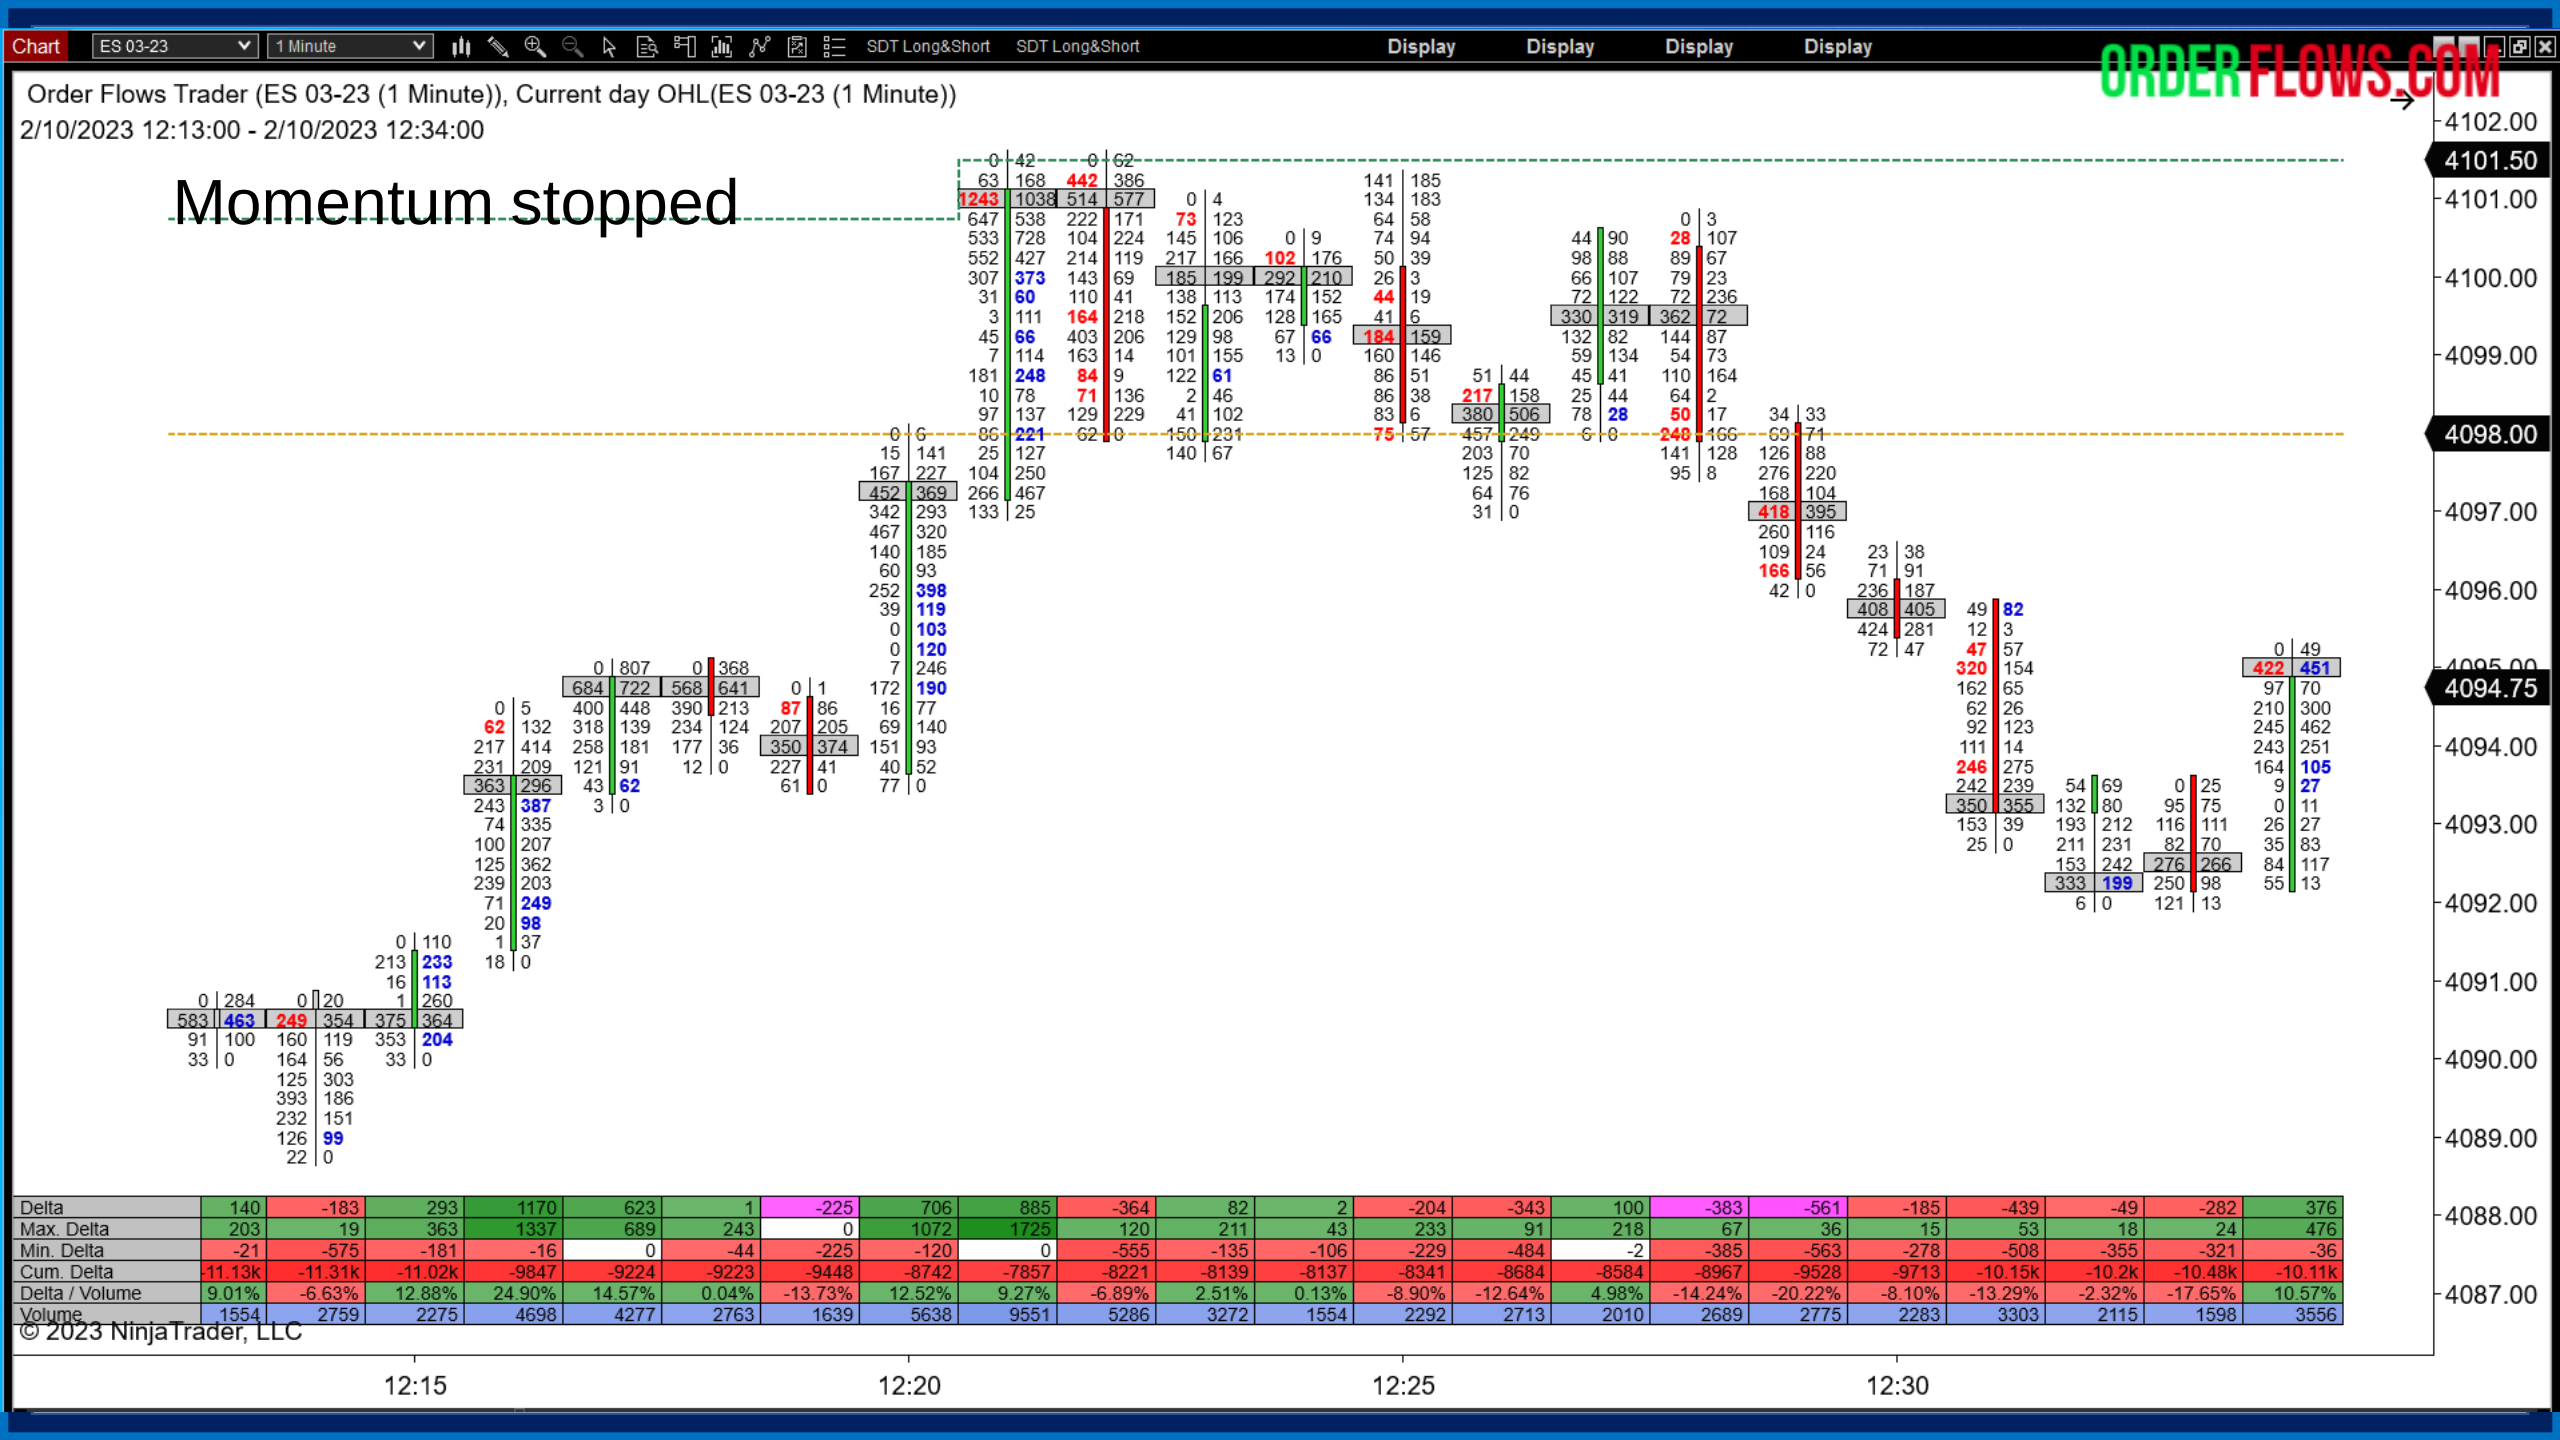

A common mistake many traders make is getting caught up with and having an unrealistic R:R and win-rate. They want an 80% win rate and/or a high R:R like 5 to 1. That is just not understanding risk. Say you have 1:3 R:R, you would only need a 30% win rate to be successful (3x3=9)-(7x1=7) net profit of 2.

Profit levels exits are determined by the goal of the trader, the risk level of the trader, and the time frame being used. Stops and targets on a 5-minute chart will be different than an hourly chart as intermediate swings may differ. There may be a swing on a 5-minute chart that is contained in an hourly chart.

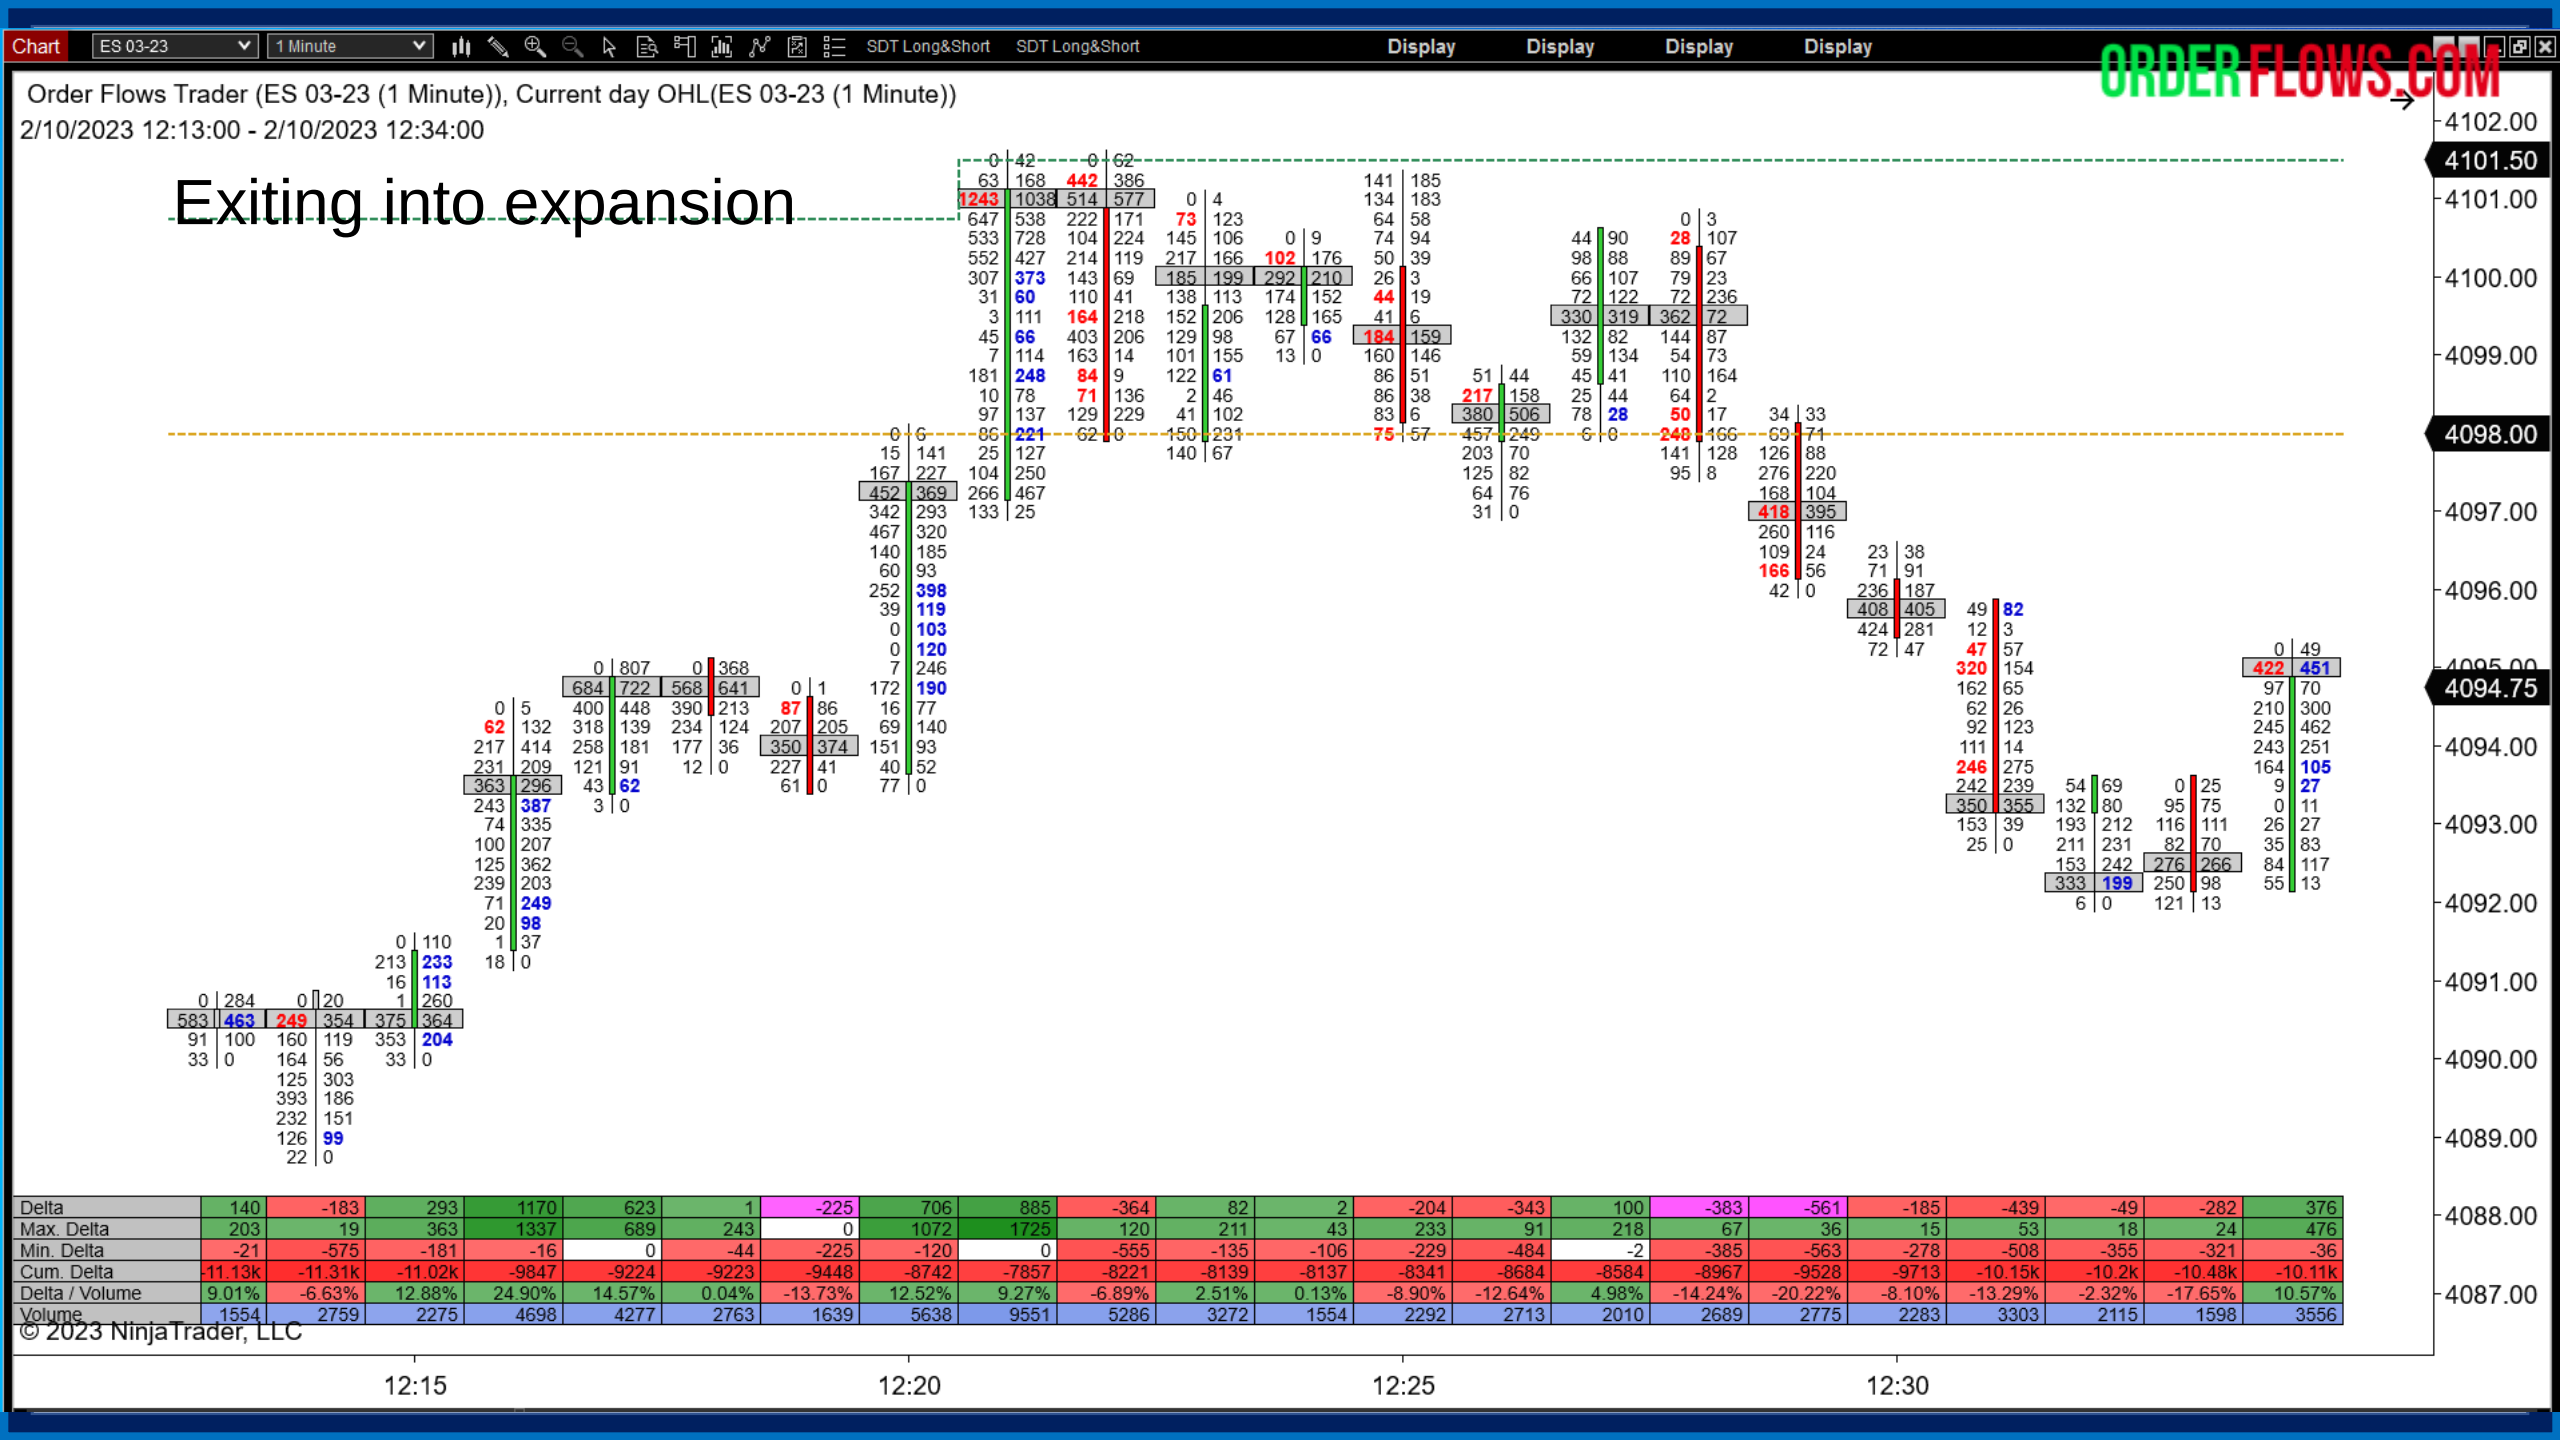

Exits - The best place to get off the momentum move is when it reaches a stopping point. Momentum is the acceleration of price movement. Deceleration is when price slows down.

Exiting into expansion is way to exit when the market is going in your favor. Expansion bars are generally twice the size as regular bars that just printed. Expansion bars generally have more volume than recent bars. You can exit as soon as the bar closes or in the next bar.

Evolving into a professional trader mindset will depend on how you view your trading results.
How do you change?
Manage your expectations/results of trading by moving beyond a simply trade-by-trade approach in favor of a "series of trades" approach.

The problem with having a trade by trade perspective:
Losing streaks cause a trader to go into a negative mindset.
Don't take every trade when there is a signal (giving them an edge) bascially overriding their method.
Anything you do, for any reason, could result in a winning trade. The problem is many of the things you could do that result in a winning trade could also reinforce trading behaviors which could lead to a catastrophic loss.

I just lost this trade.

After every trade win or lose can set you up for a mental mistake on the next trade:

If the trade was a winning trade, a common mistake a trader can make on the next trade is:

Getting in too early.
Over leveraging
Not taking predefined profits.
Not letting our predefined stop gets triggered (moving it).
Basically, we feel as if we know everything about trading.

After every trade win or lose can set you up for a mental mistake on the next trade:

If the trade was a losing trade, a common mistake traders can make on the next trade is:

Getting in too late. Hesitation.
Not getting into the trade at all. Passing on trades.
Getting out too early, just trying to book any profit, or moving the stop to break even too early.
Overleveraging and revenge trading.
Moving predefined stop levels wider than normal.

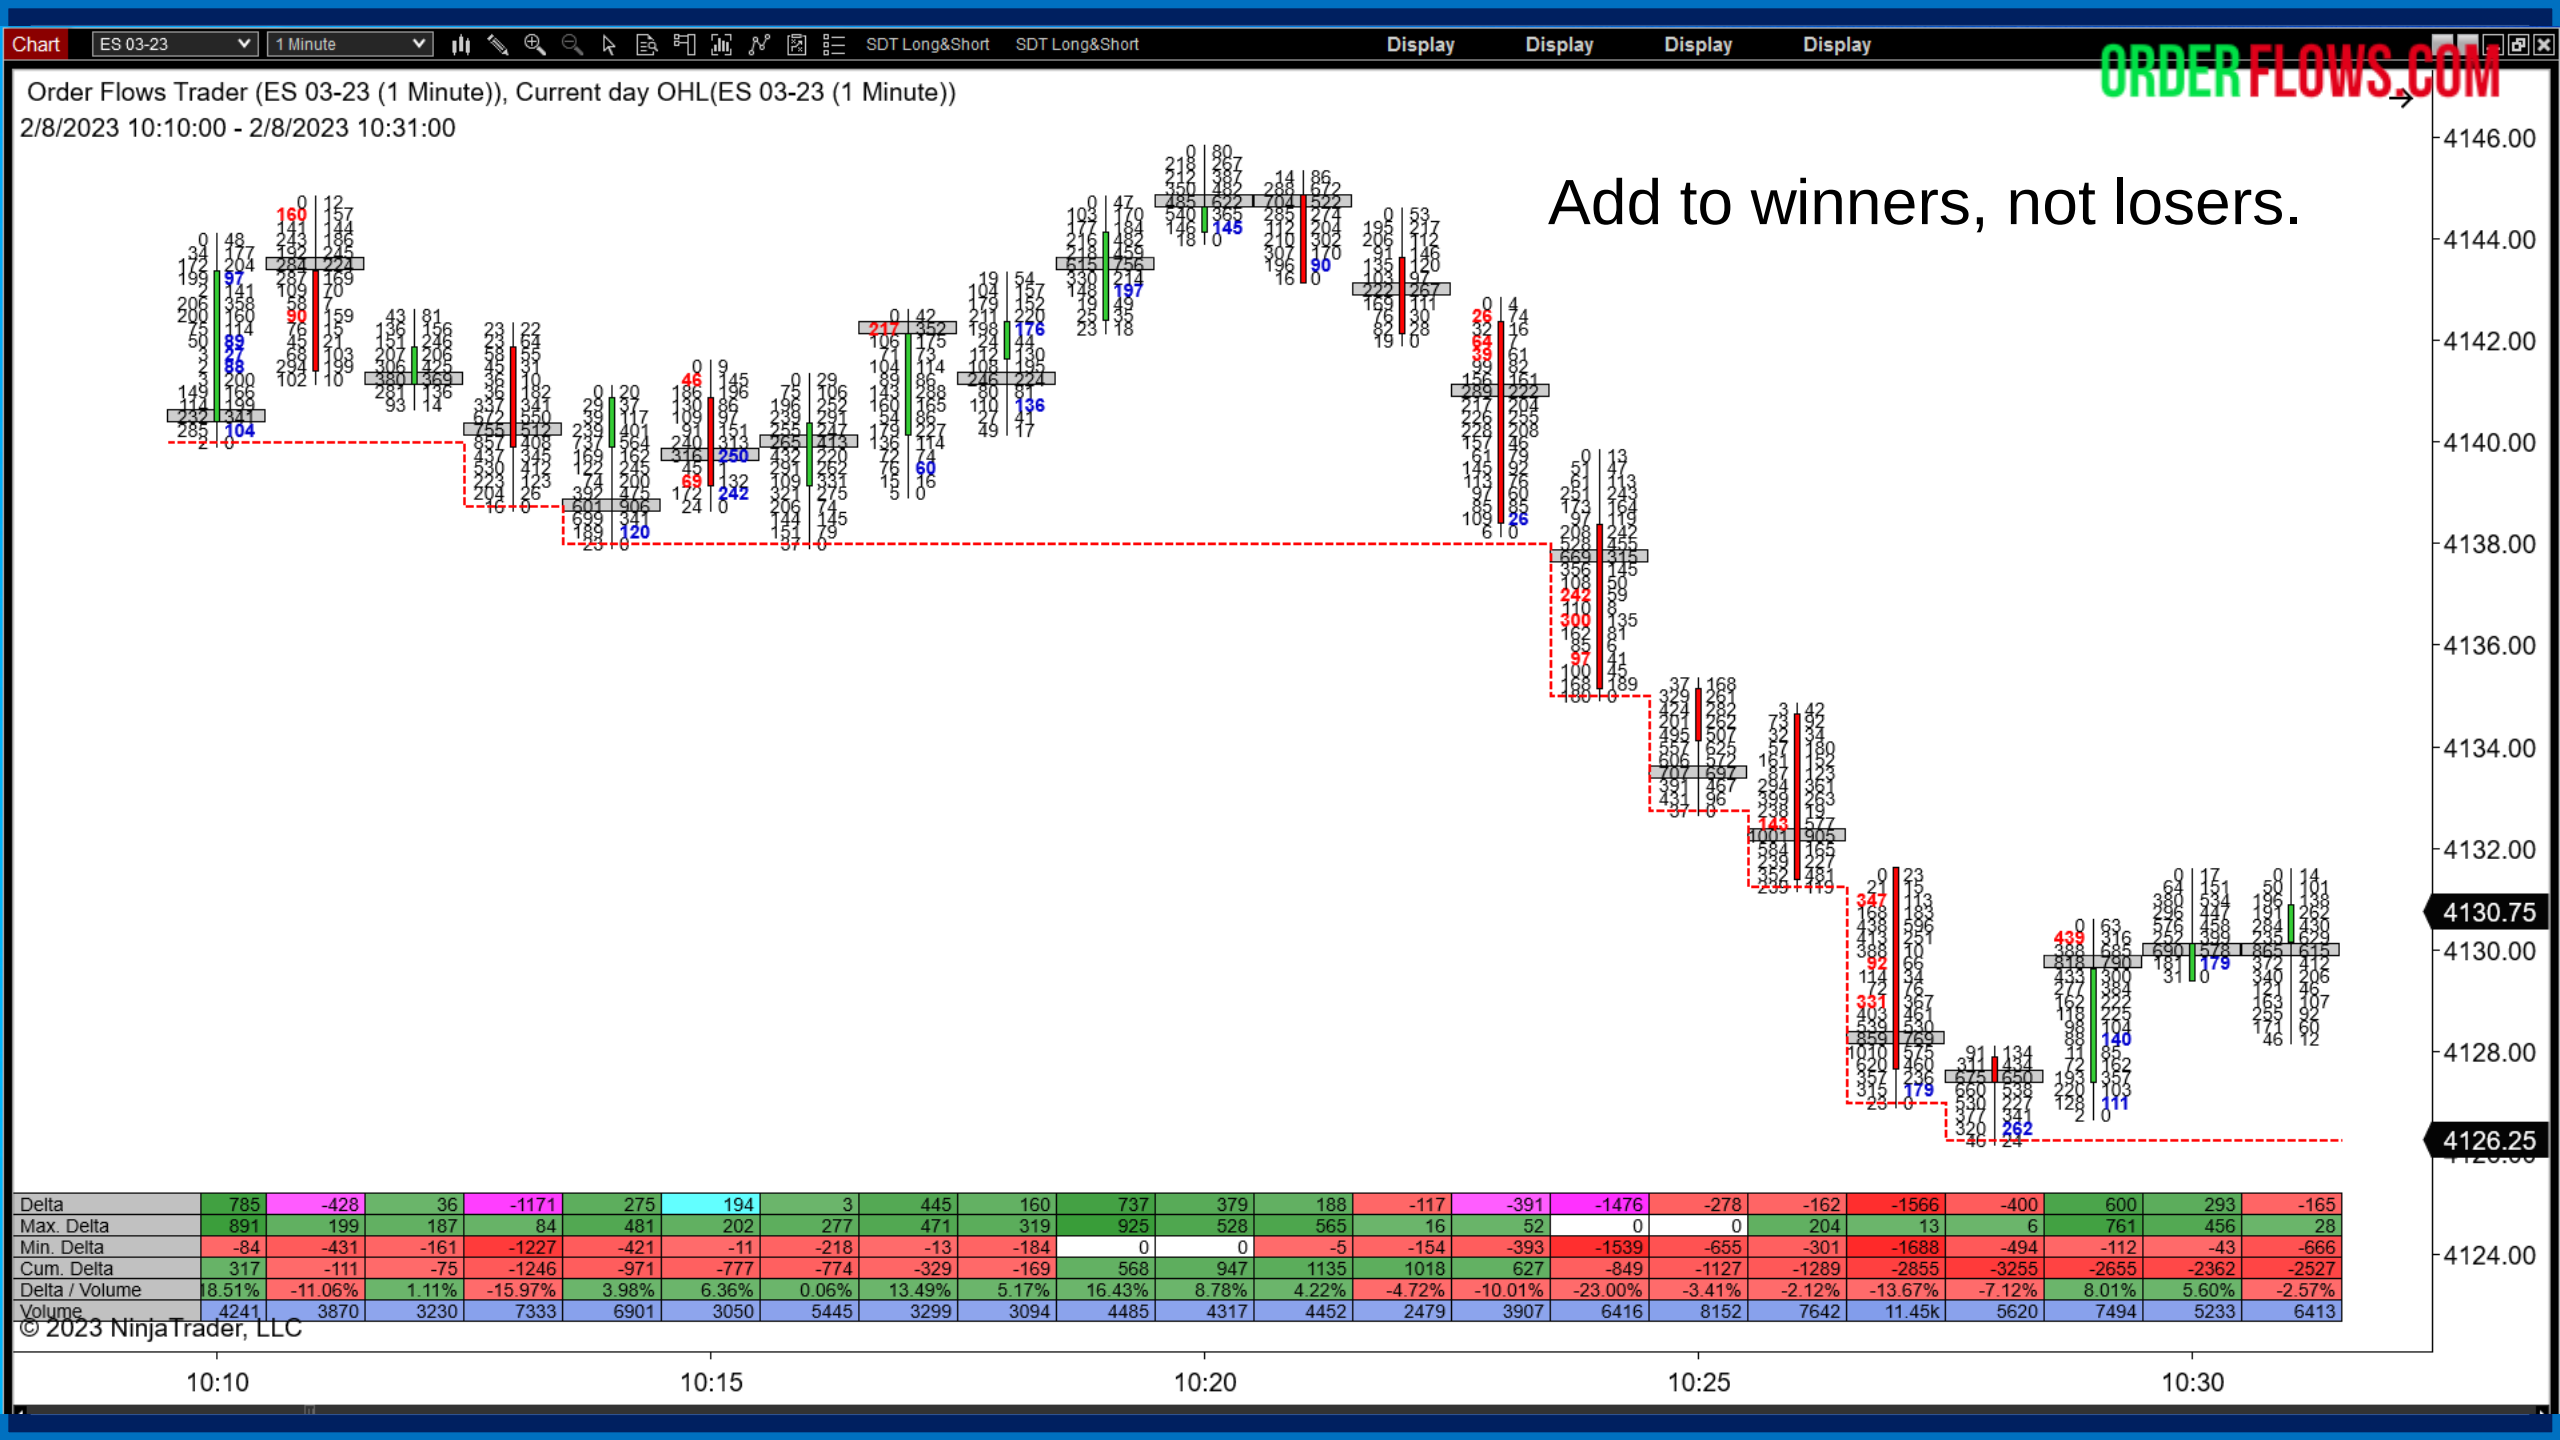

The benefits of having a "series of trades" perspecitve.
No one trade has any more significance than any other trade.
You are not living or dying on each trade result so you will have a more sense of freedom in your trading in that you won't be worried about taking the next trade or not.
You will learn better what works and what doesn't work because you won't be changing how you trade on the fly.

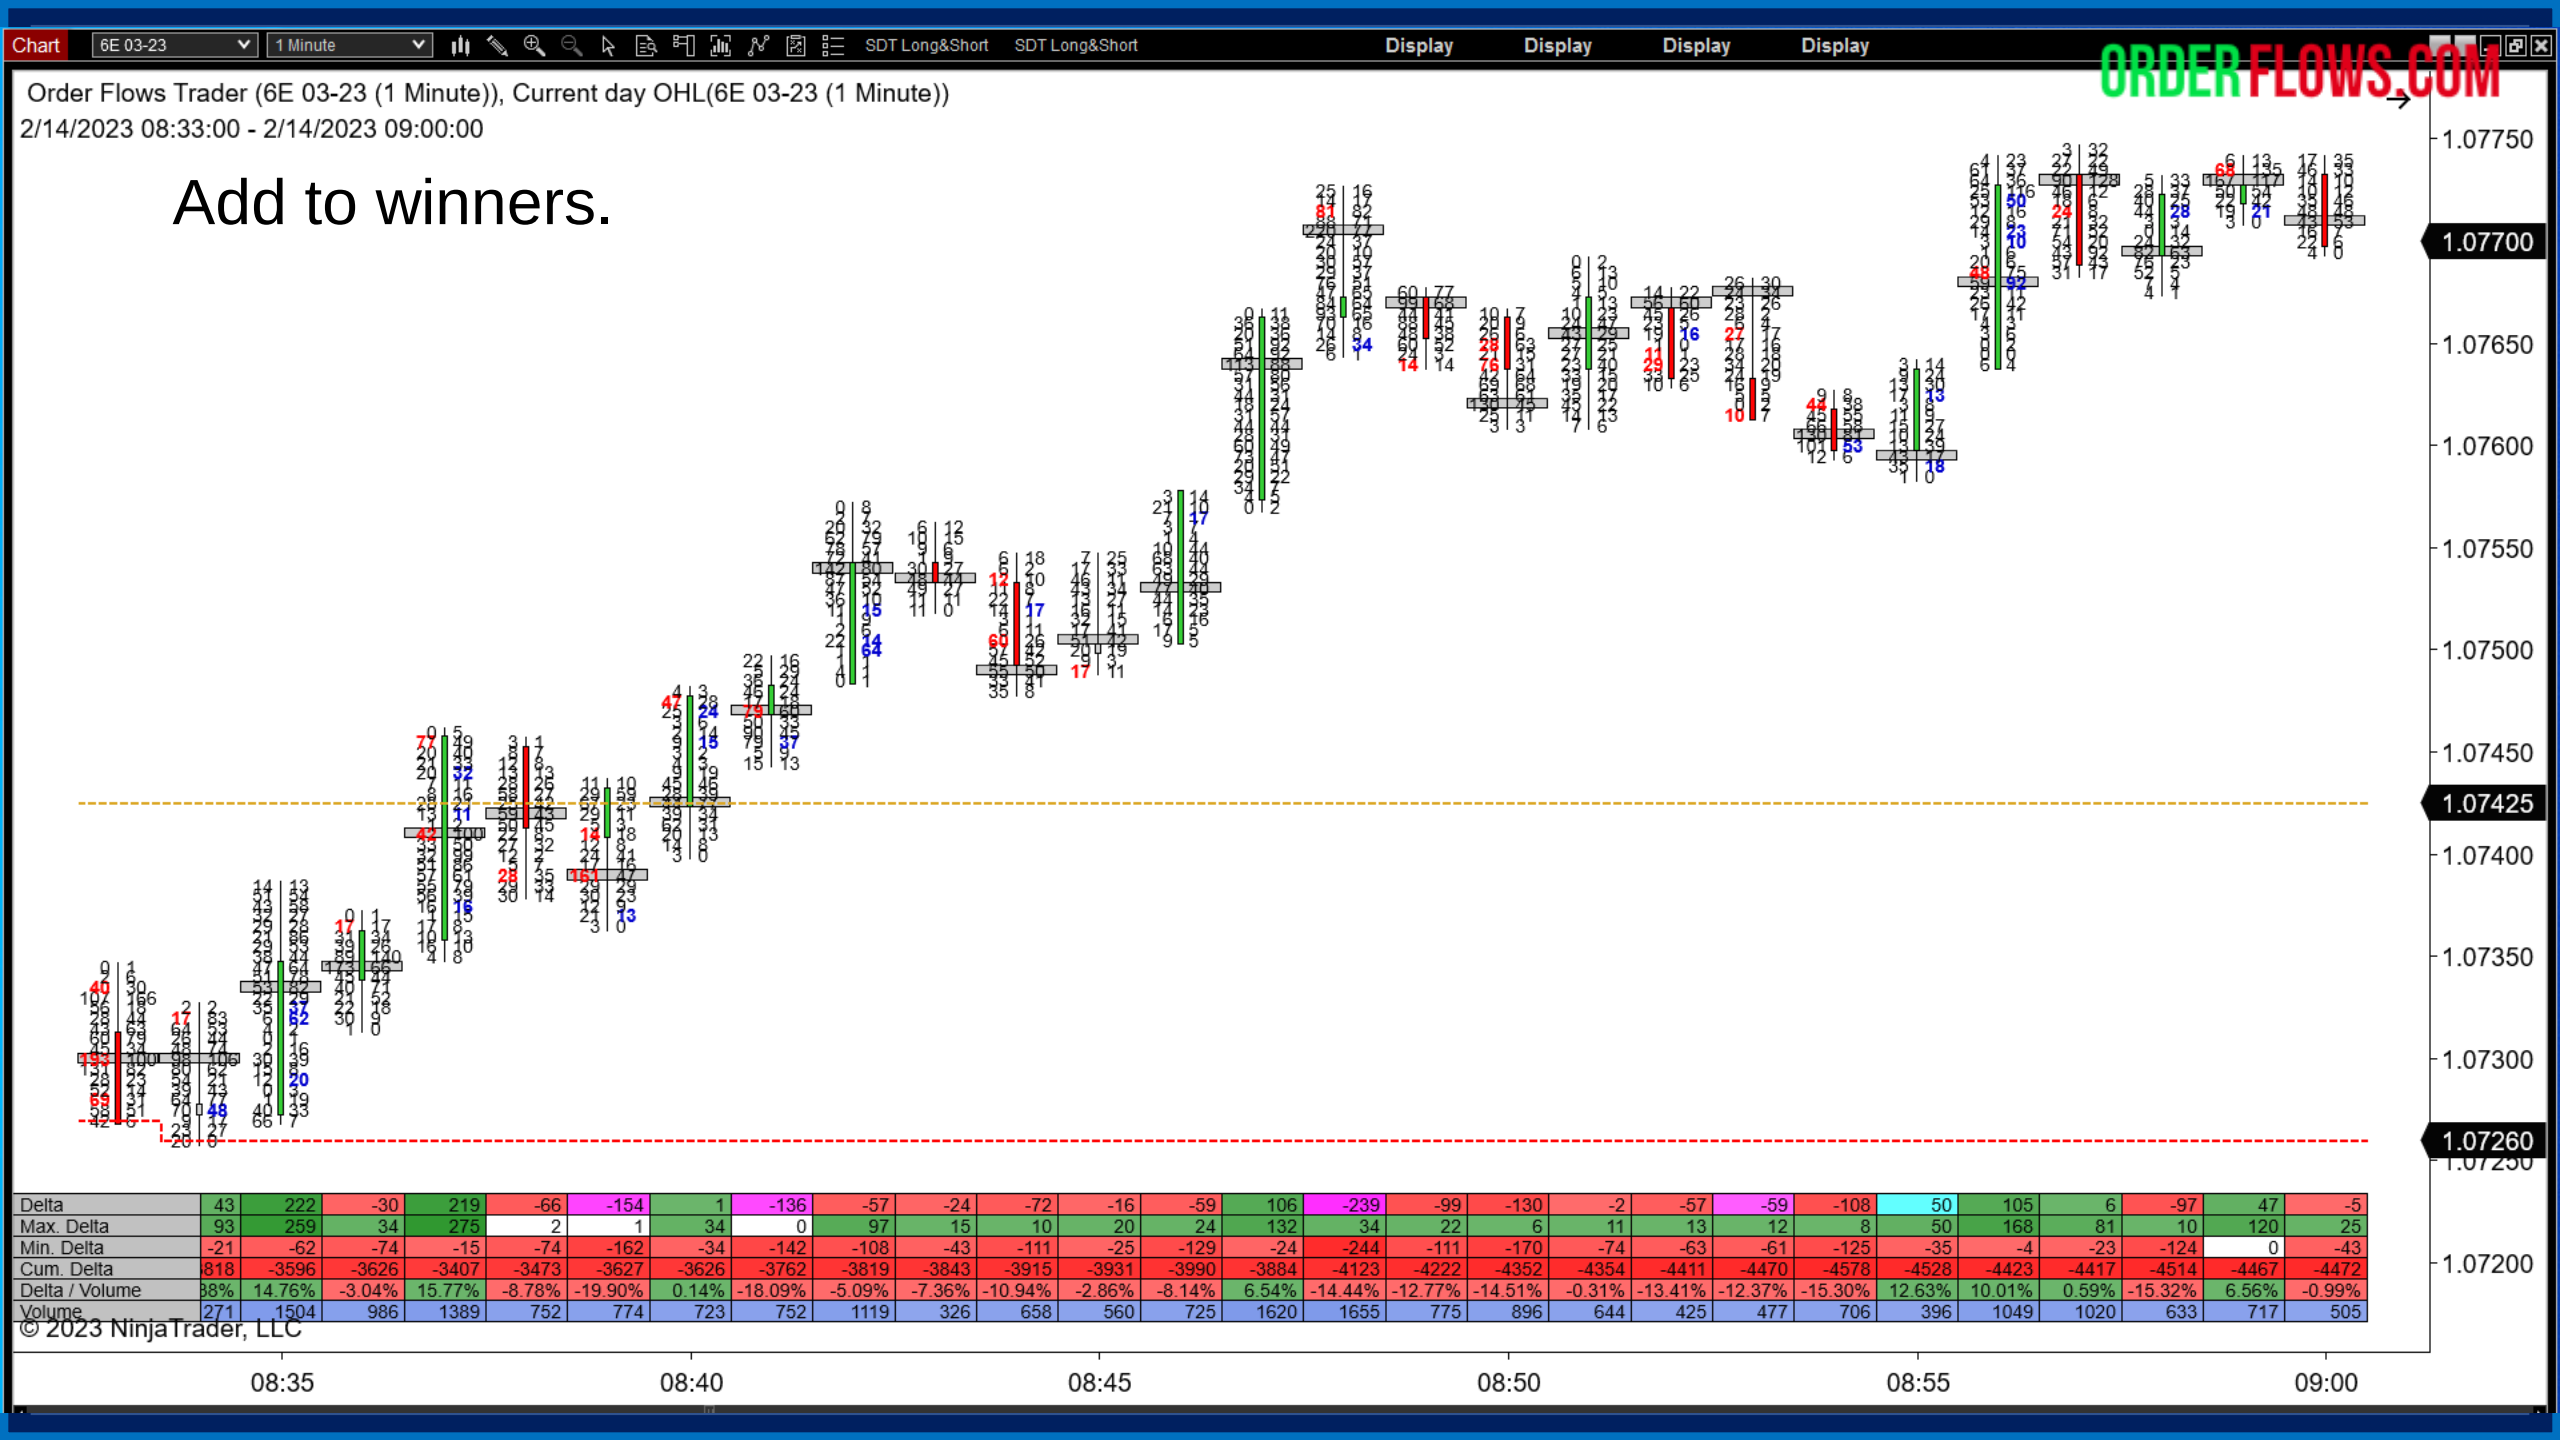

Institutional traders don't use stops the way retail traders do. Institutional traders are not leveraged the same way retail is so they are not as vulnerable to manipulative activities in the market. Quick adverse price movements don't force them out of the market the way it will retail traders. If the institutional traders do use leverage, then they often hedge with options that doesn't require them to use stops. They have the safety net provided by slightly out of the money hedges against their futures position to survive the unexpected price swings.

Adding to a loser causes traders to overleverage. Traders end up with more contracts than they can handle under the disguise that they averaging their position. If you are going to average into a position, you want to average up, not average down. Add more contracts as the market is moving in your favor, not when it is moving against you. Add to winners, not losers.

Trade-by-trade vs. series of trades: Successful traders make thousands of trades over their career, while there are standout trades, there is not usually one trade that is more important than another. But a trading career can be wiped out with one catastrophic loss. Keep your losses small.

Trading is a game of intellect, it involves some thinking on your part. Anger, fear and overconfidence are common emotions that may help you recoup a loss but they ultimately lead to defeat because they cloud the intellectual process. If you suffered a loss, don't let anger make you start trading too aggressively.

Laziness is the cornerstone of most mistakes traders make.

We are all emotional beings, but when emotion tells you to get into a trade, instead of your trading plan, you need to take a step back and have a reality check.

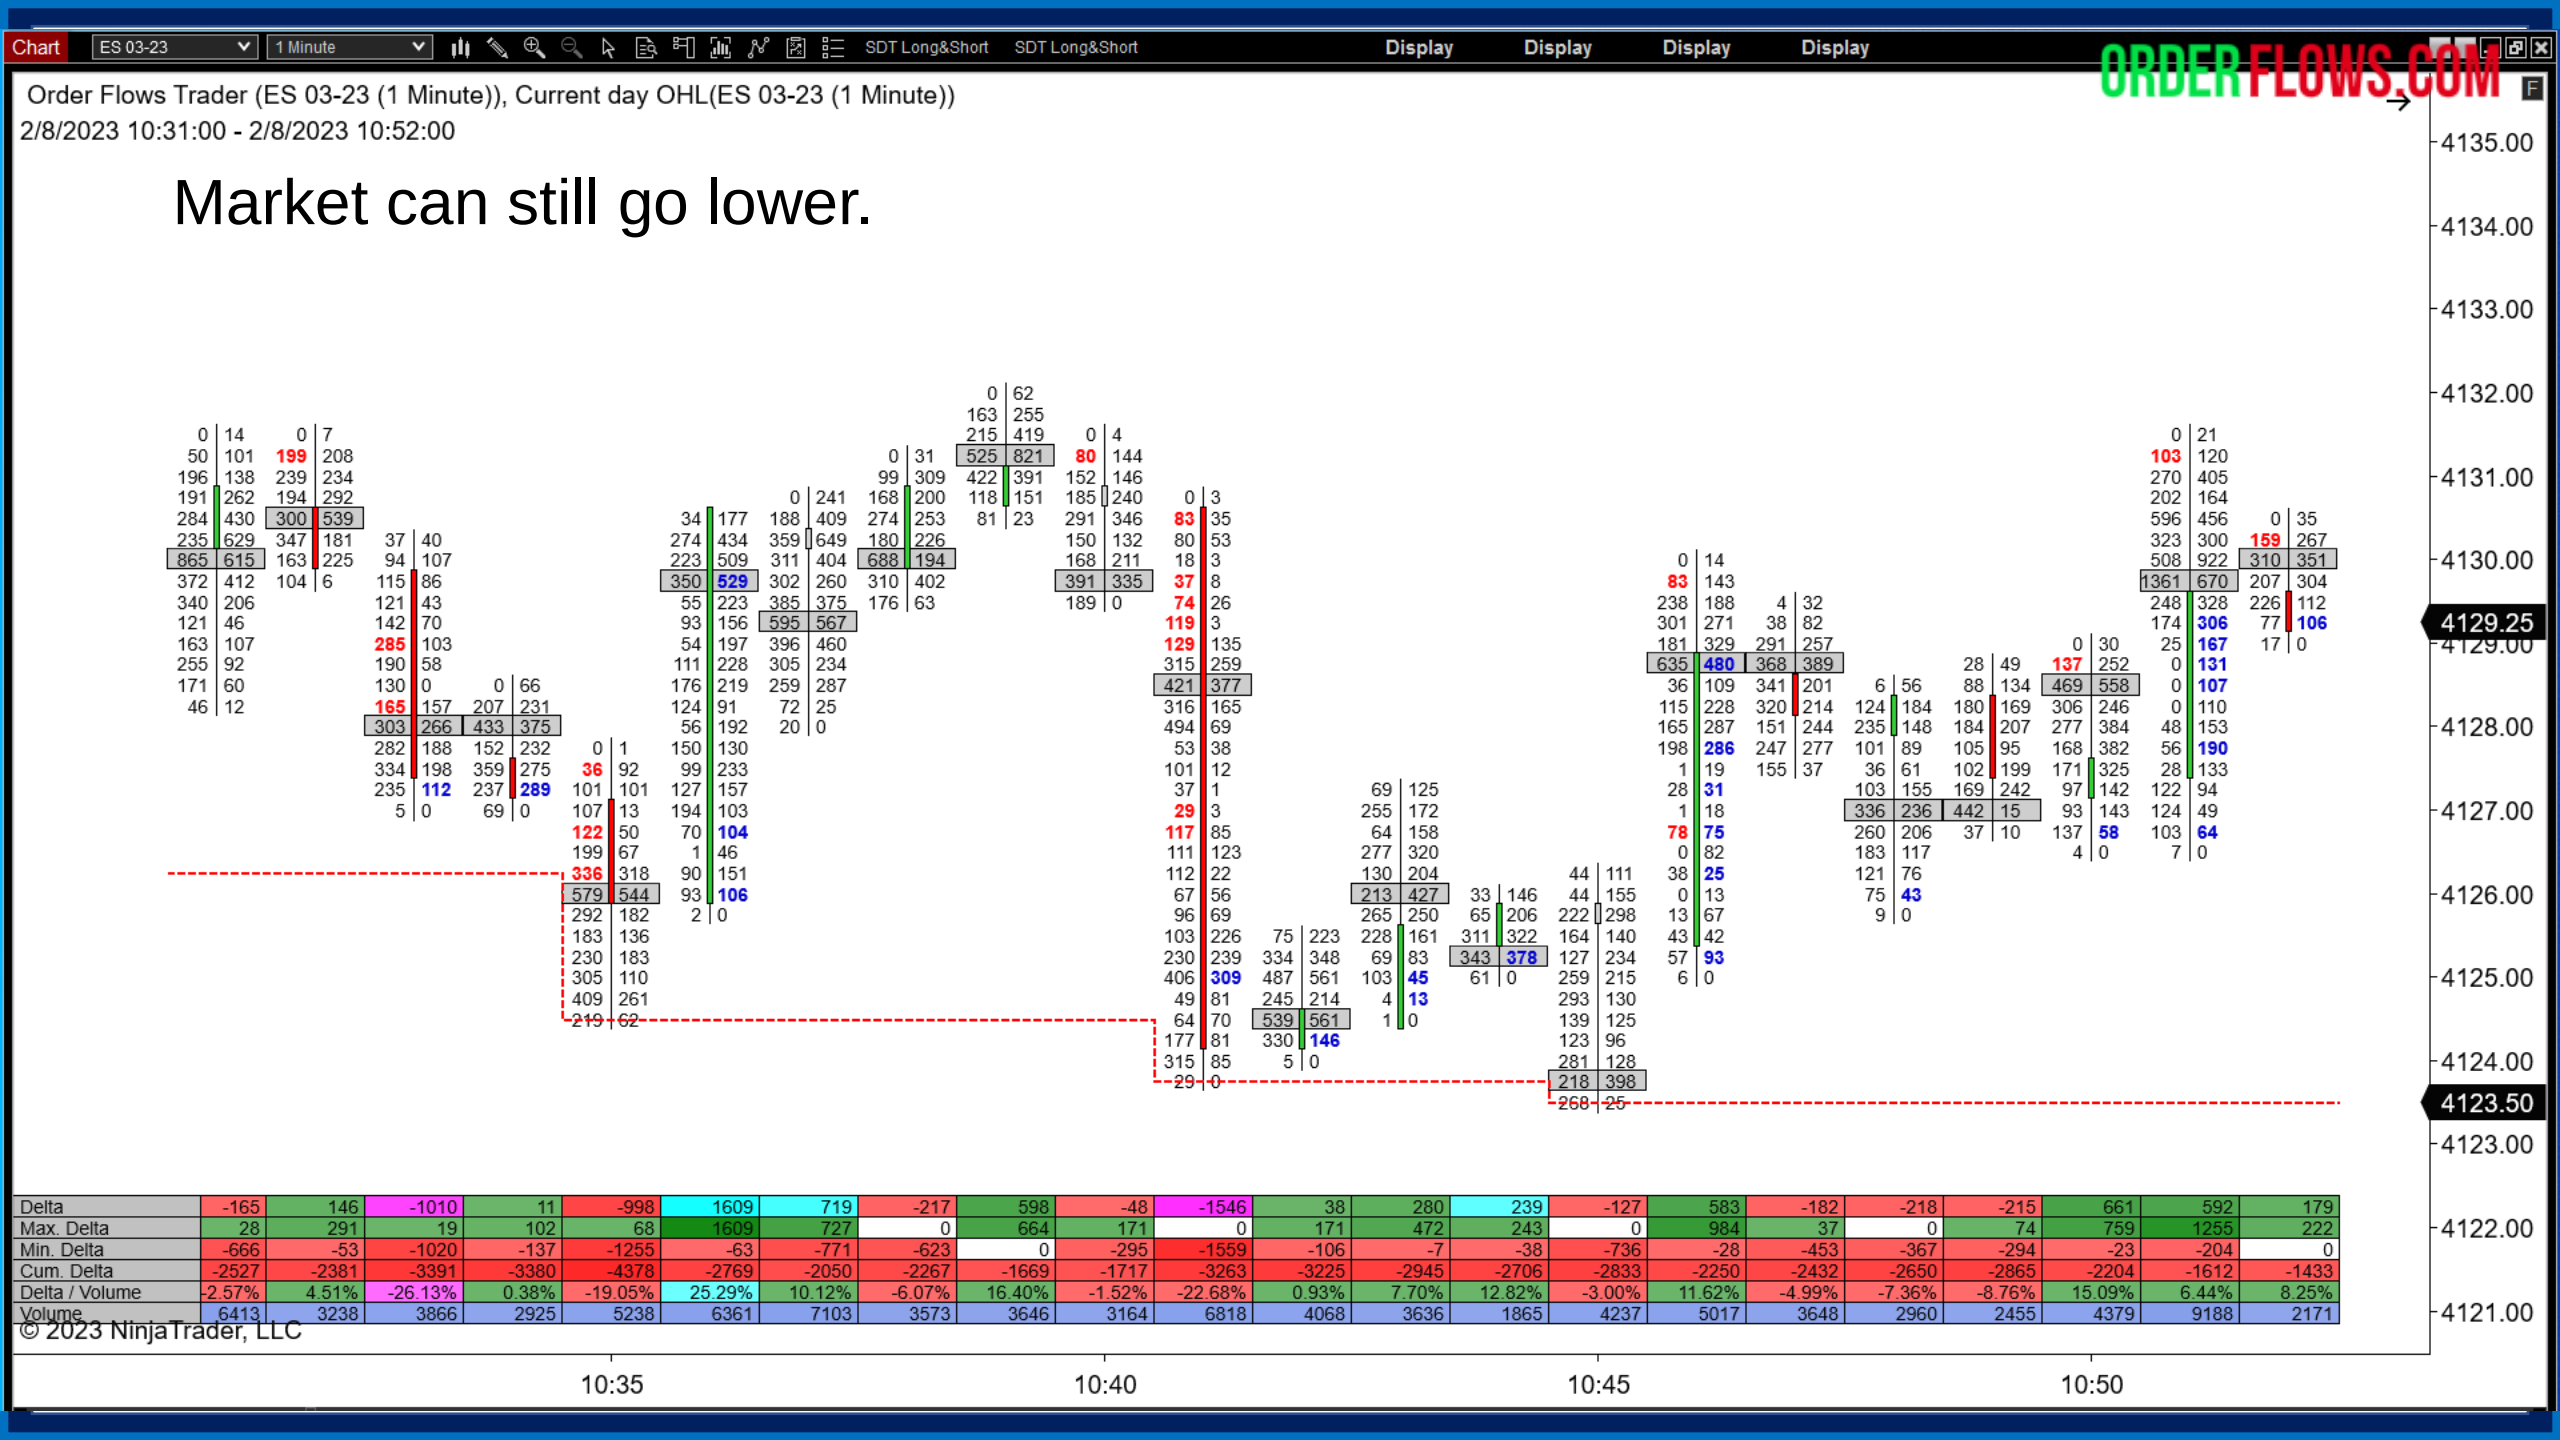

Fear is a self-fulfilling prophecy. Fear of losing will surely cause you to lose.

Overconfidence leads you away from the realities of trading to the world of wishful thinking. It is like sowing seeds of defeat, fear germinates it and eventually you harvest a loss.

A stop is your safety net. Even trapeze artists do their tricks with a safety net below. Why? Because they know that one mistake is all it takes to end everything in a bad way.

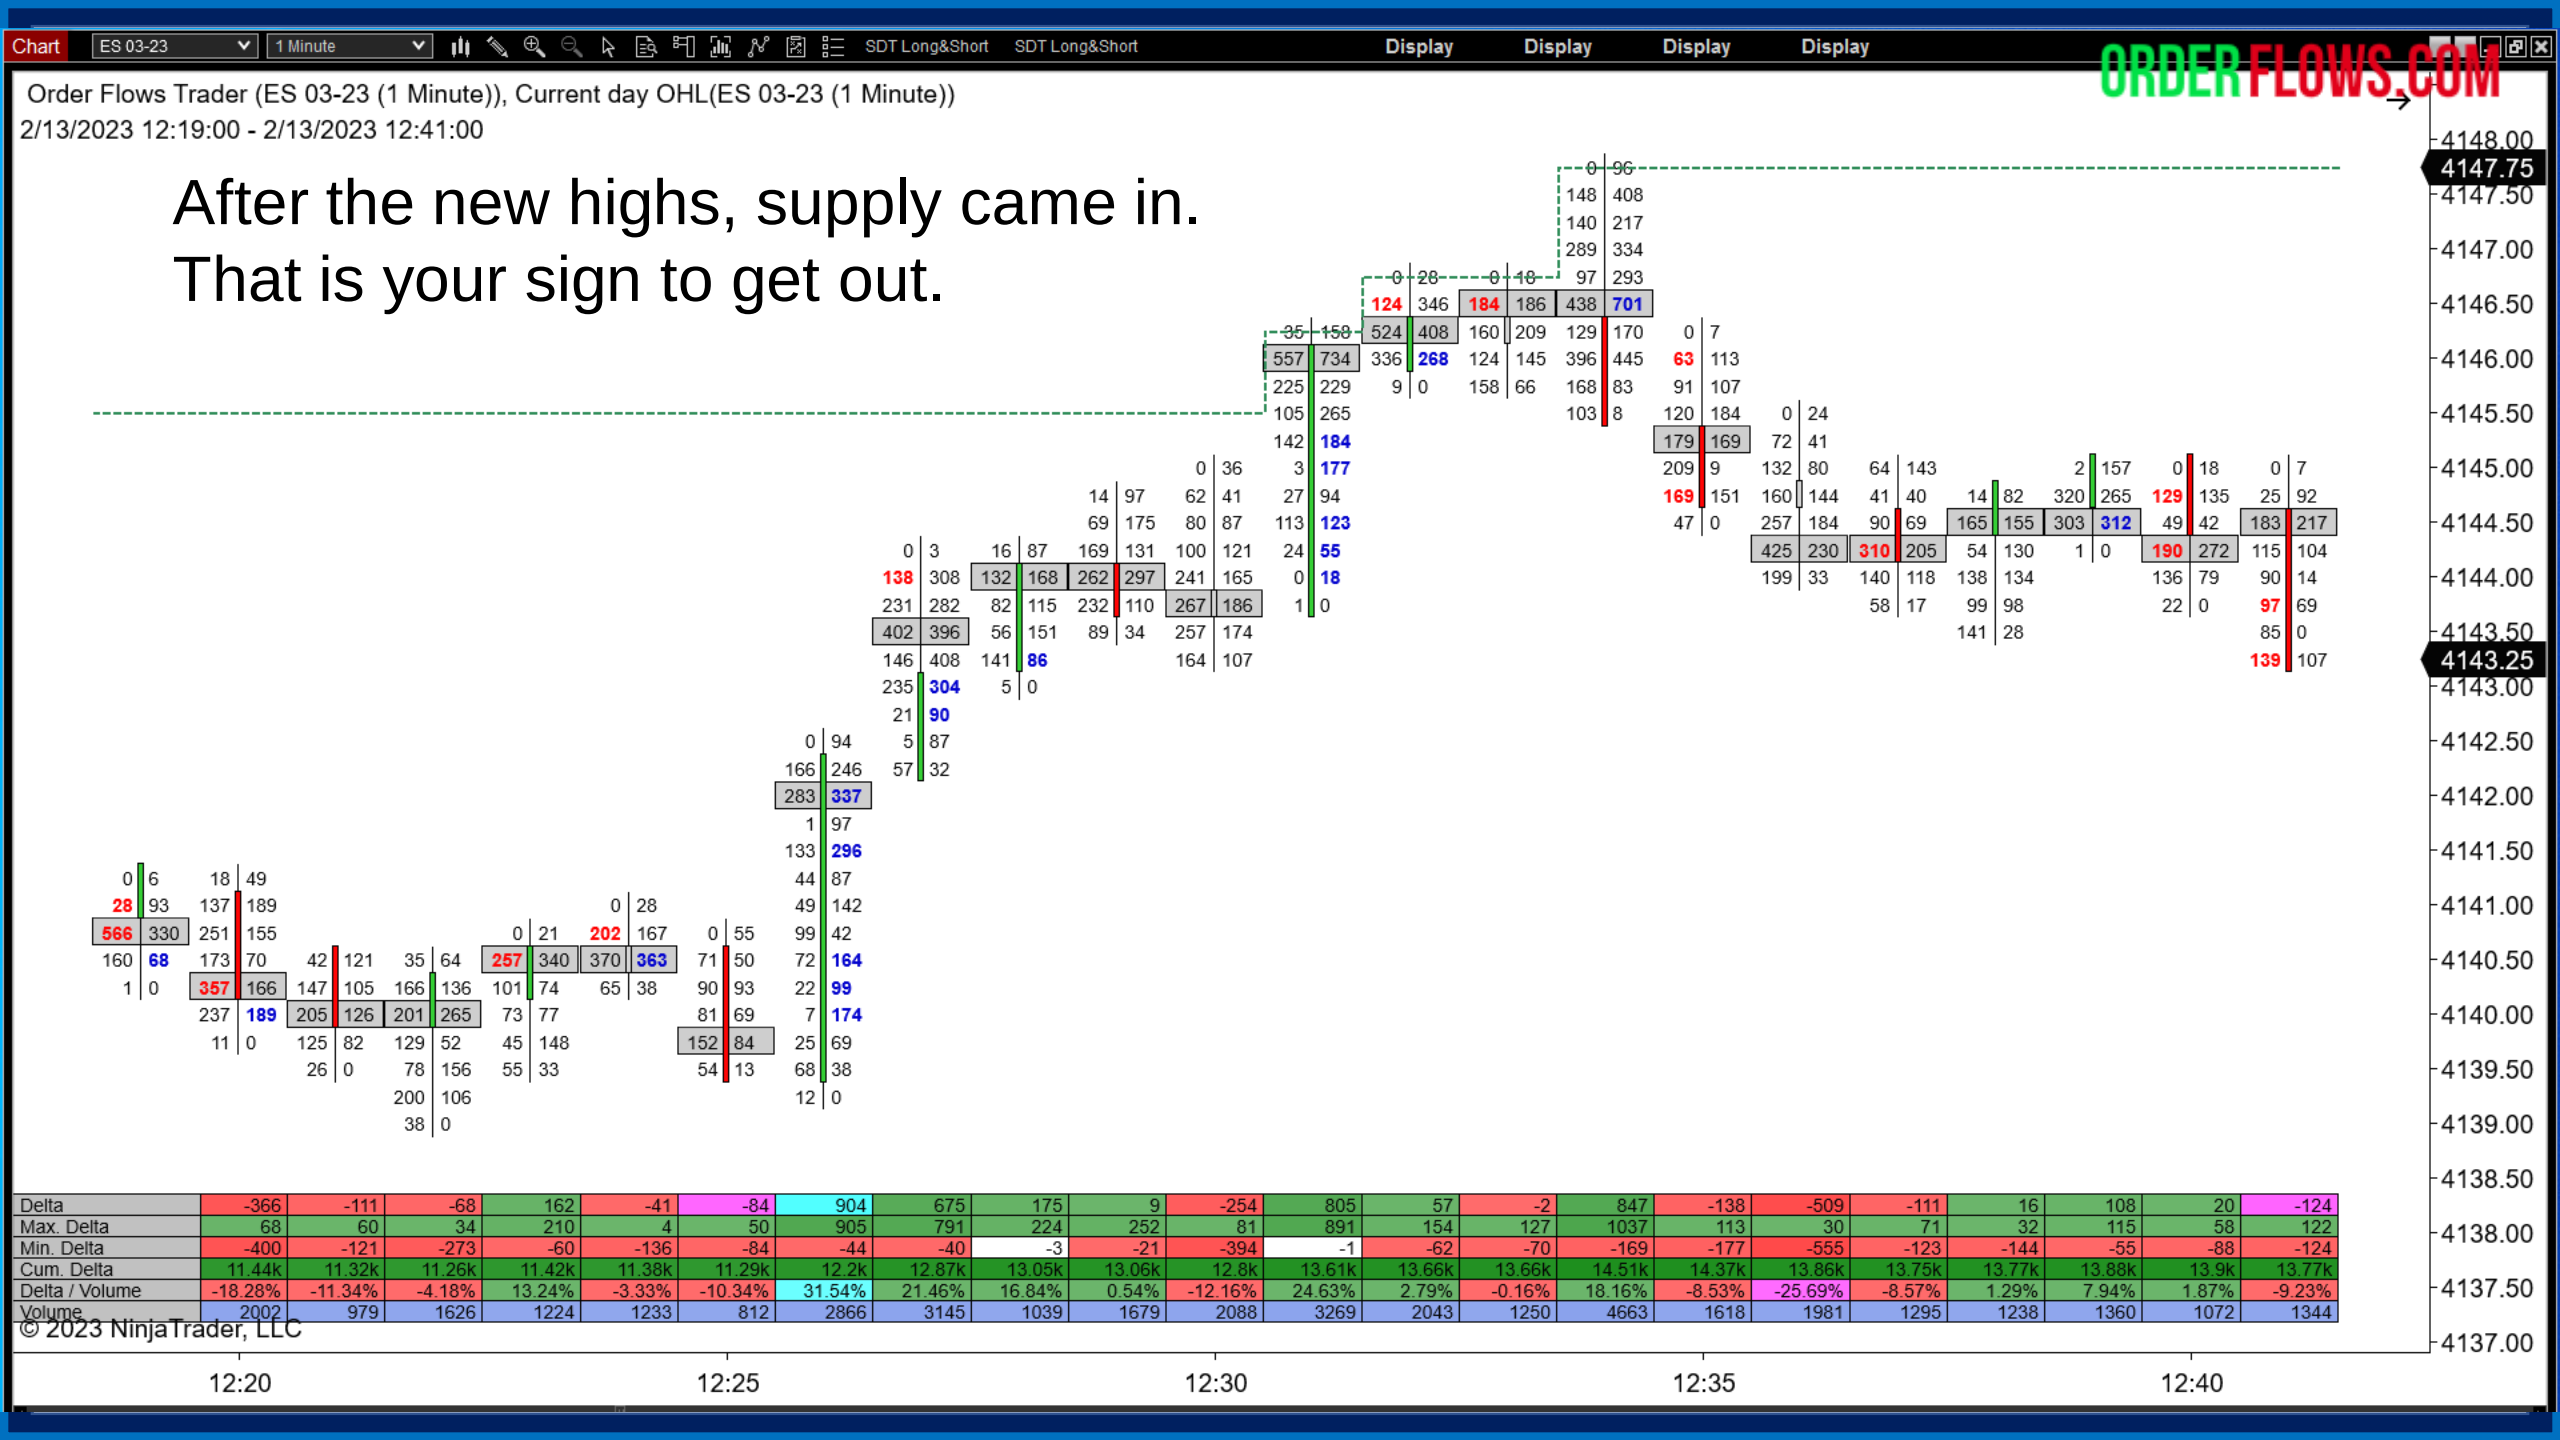

I can't mention it enough, but once a stop level is violated, you have to liquidate the position immediately. There is no point holding anymore as price has proven your reading of the market wrong, your trade is wrong, even if it is temporary or not, like a tick or two through. Your analysis was wrong. You can always get back into the market if the order flow becomes strong again. If you fail to get out, you have broken your risk management system and leave the position open for a potentially bigger loss. Remember the stop is part of the trade setup, it essentially exists to tell you that the conditions for the trade are violated.

Let’s talk about profit targets. While I use an ATM for take profits and stop losses after I get into a trade. When you have a fixed take profit level you are basically taking the stance that you know how buyers and sellers are going to react in the future. You still have to watch and confirm what is happening in the market. You still have to manage the trade. That is how you hold on to trades longer or cut losers shorter. Watch how the market is responding as it goes up or down to your target or stop.

The market can't hurt you beyond your predefined risks so why do you start to panic when the market starts to move against you, especially immediately?

Believe in yourself, believe in your process, believe in your analysis. We all have different beliefs about the market. That is what makes the market. You have to start thinking "I believe in my trade, either the market trades out according to my analysis and I make a profit, which I will gladly take, or it will create a controlled loss, which I will also take.

Do not blame others for your trade not working out.

Do not complain about the market for your trade not working out.

Be accountable for your trading decisions.

Trust yourself not only in your decision making but also in your ability to execute your trades.
